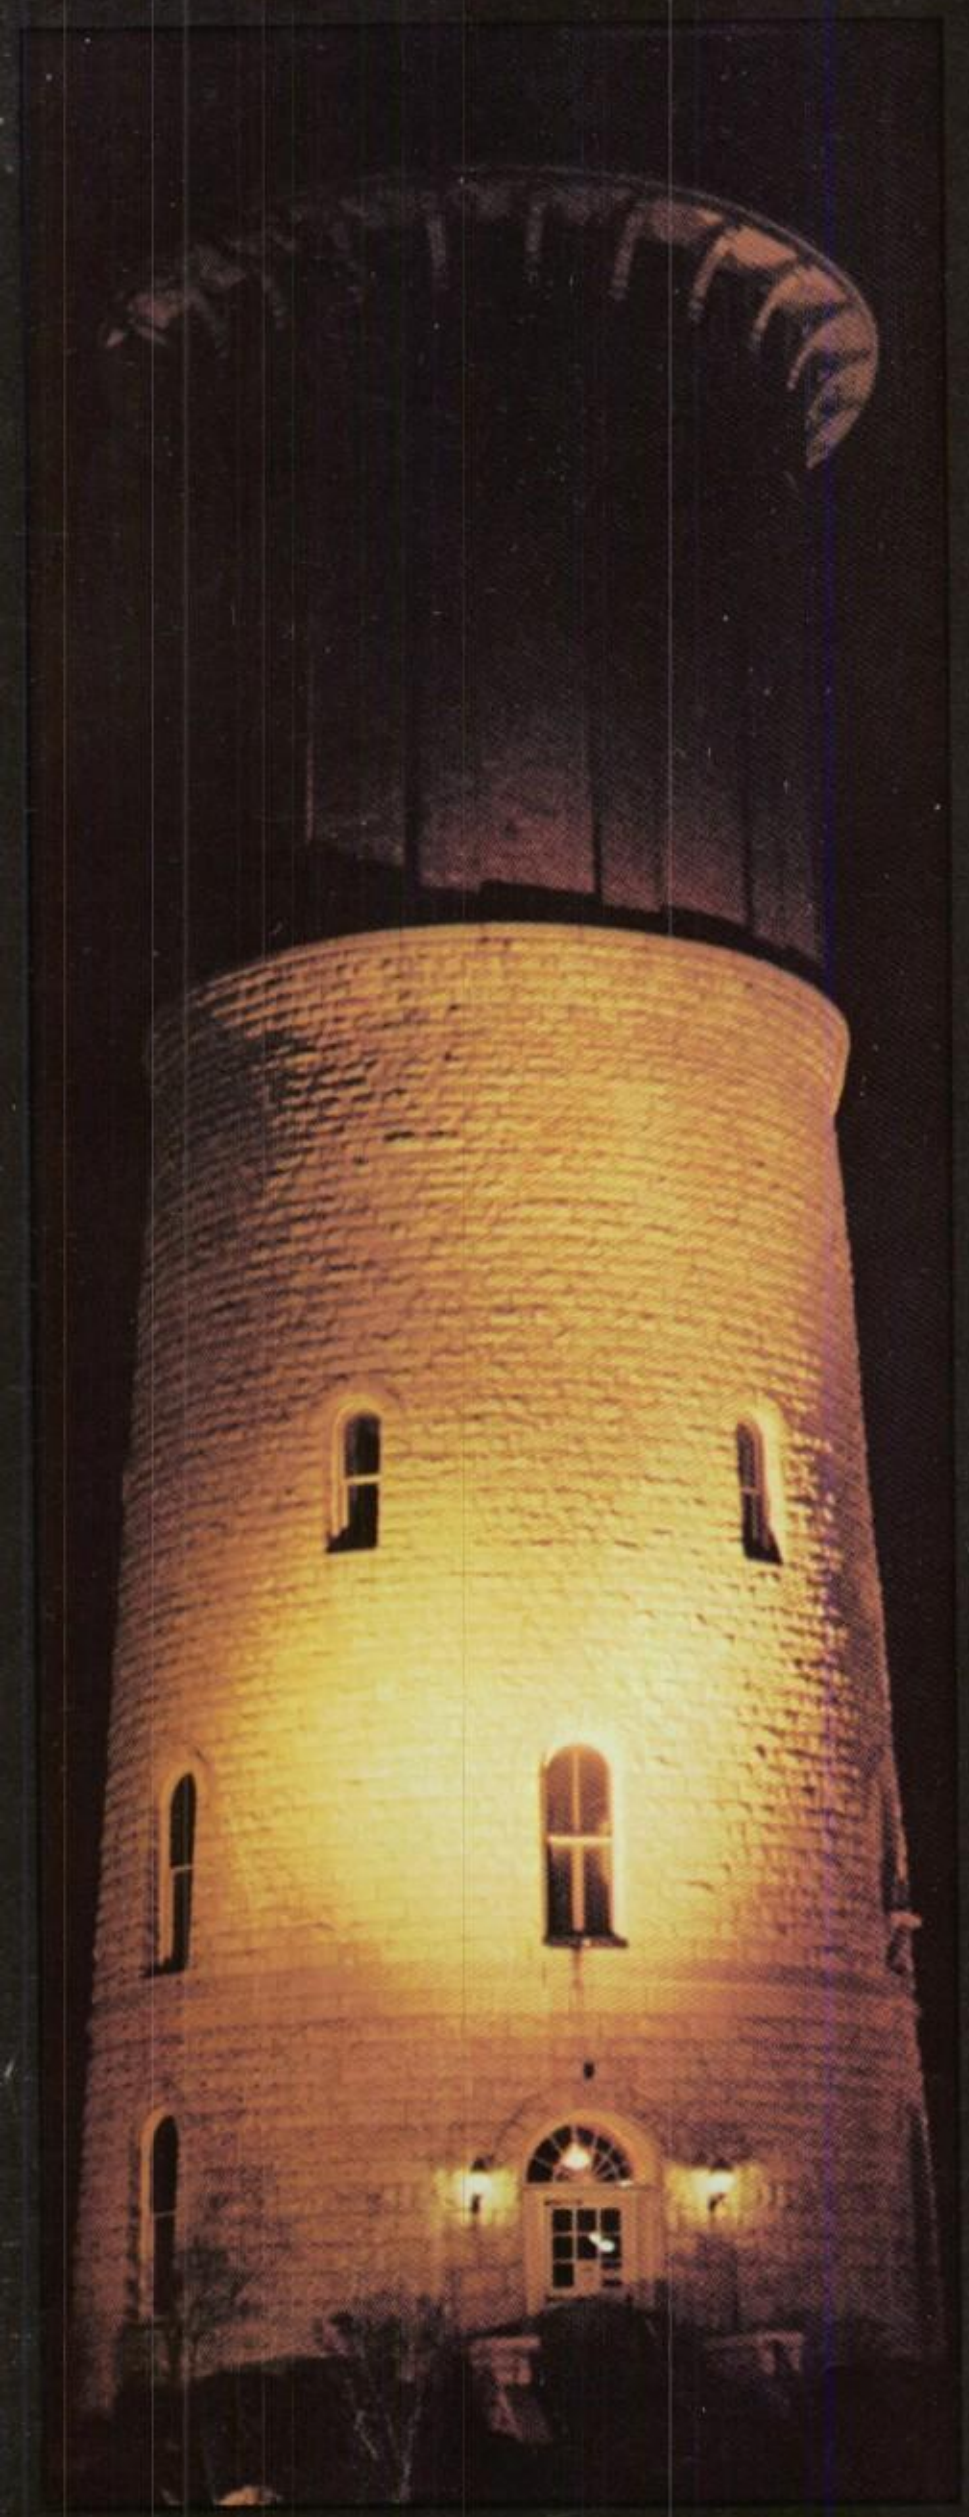
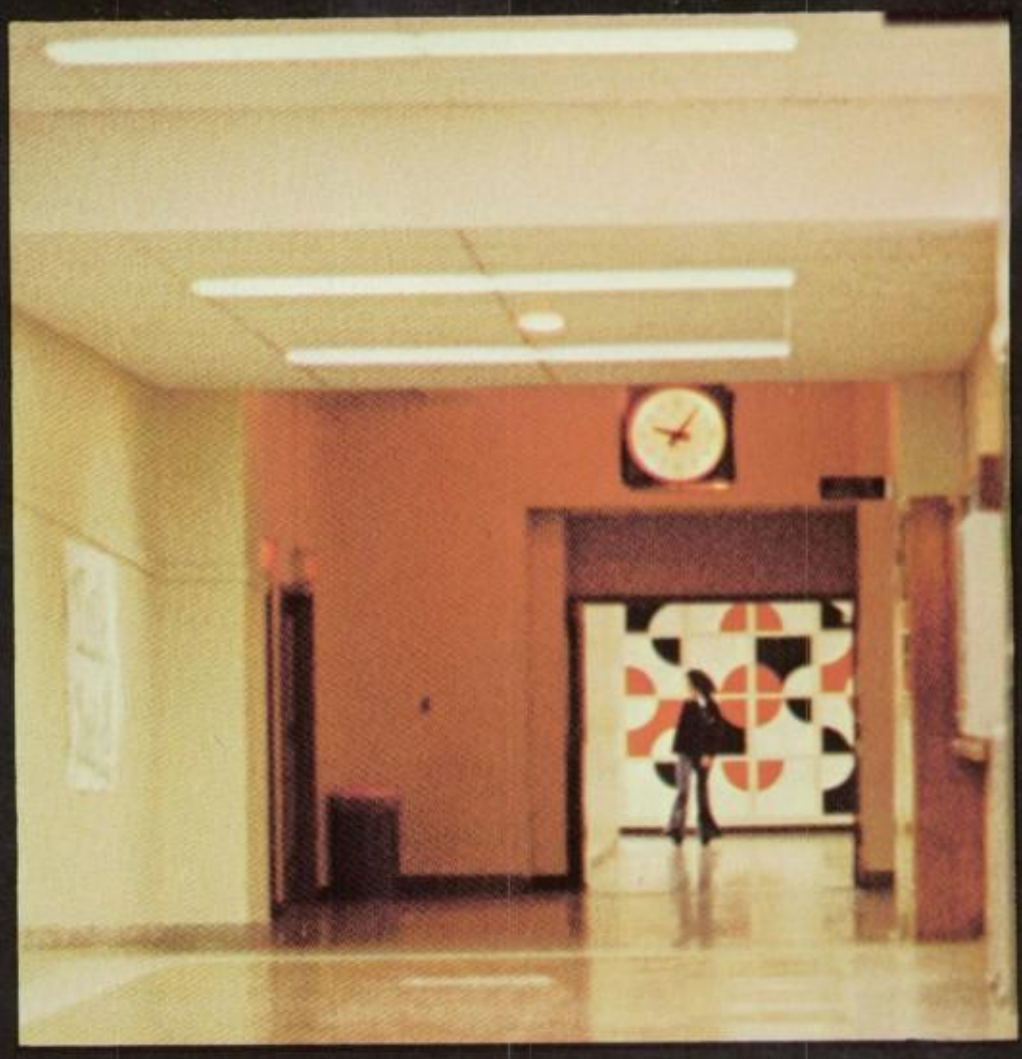
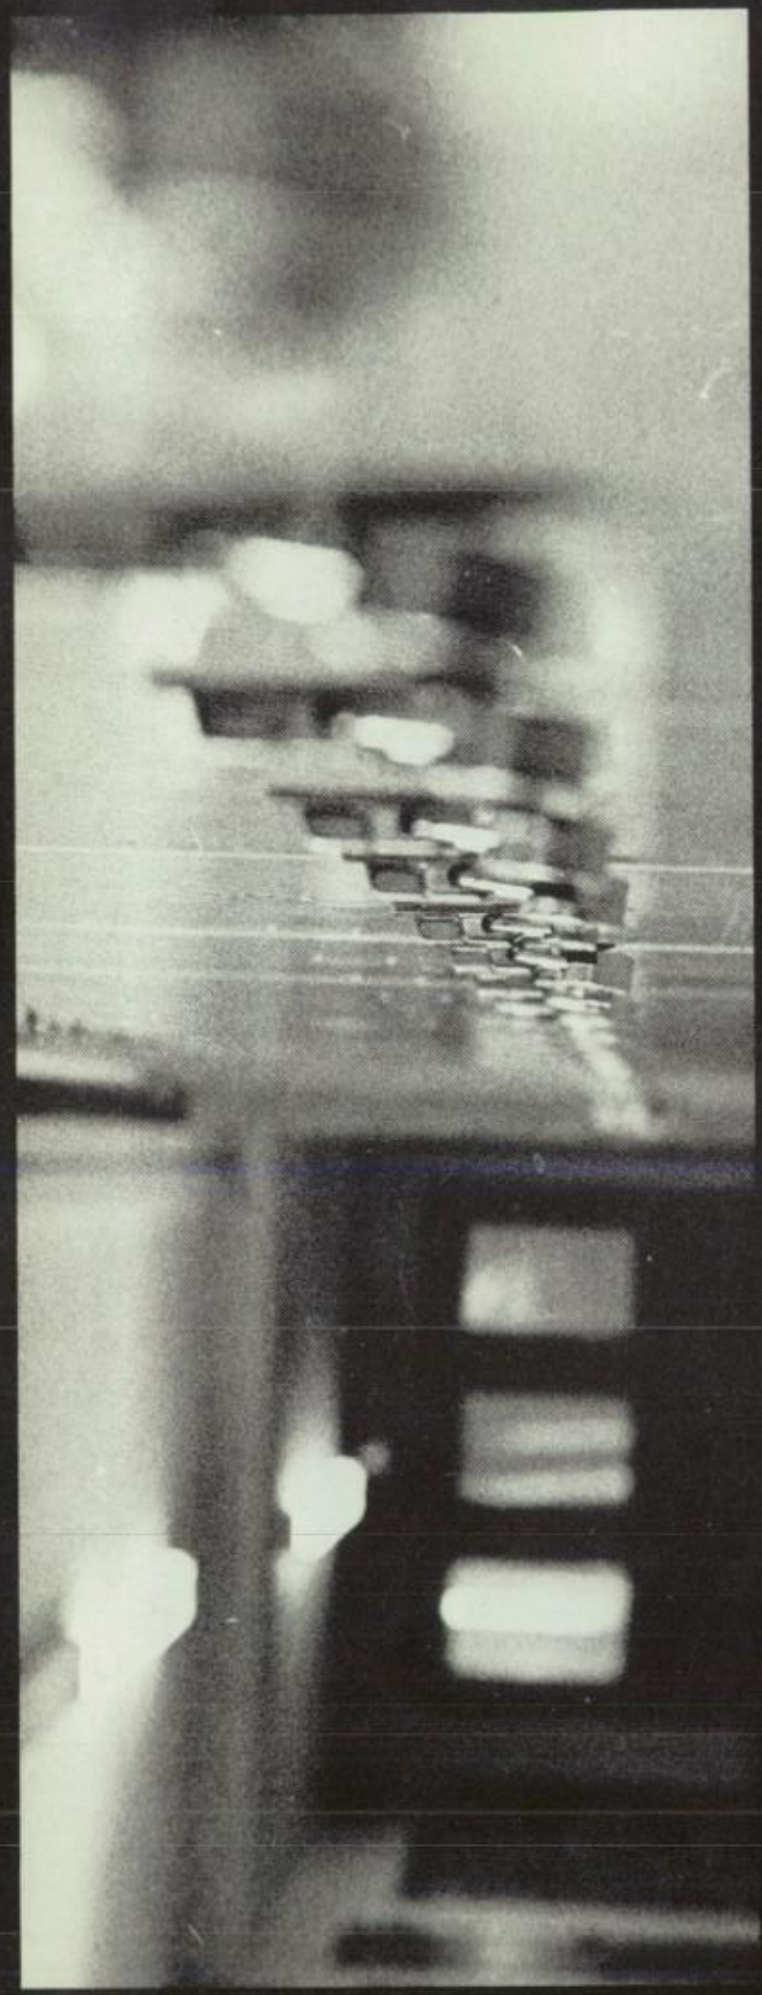
The seeming disorganization of each day makes you think that there is no order, that the world is distorted beyond repair. Because you have been too busy leading a hectic life, you have failed to study and admire the irresistible plan under which nature, the world, operates. You cannot ignore the chaos that is present, but an overconcern with it can cloud your perception of the beauty and proportion that exist in the world and in your life.





You have always known the earth is covered with people and events to be explored; yet you have missed most of them. You realize your life and viewpoint have been distorted by your small experiences, and there is no way for you to change yourself to be open-minded, to see things in perspective. You try to find balance, to experience viewpoints while keeping your identity as Number One.



BENNETT FIELD
LIONS

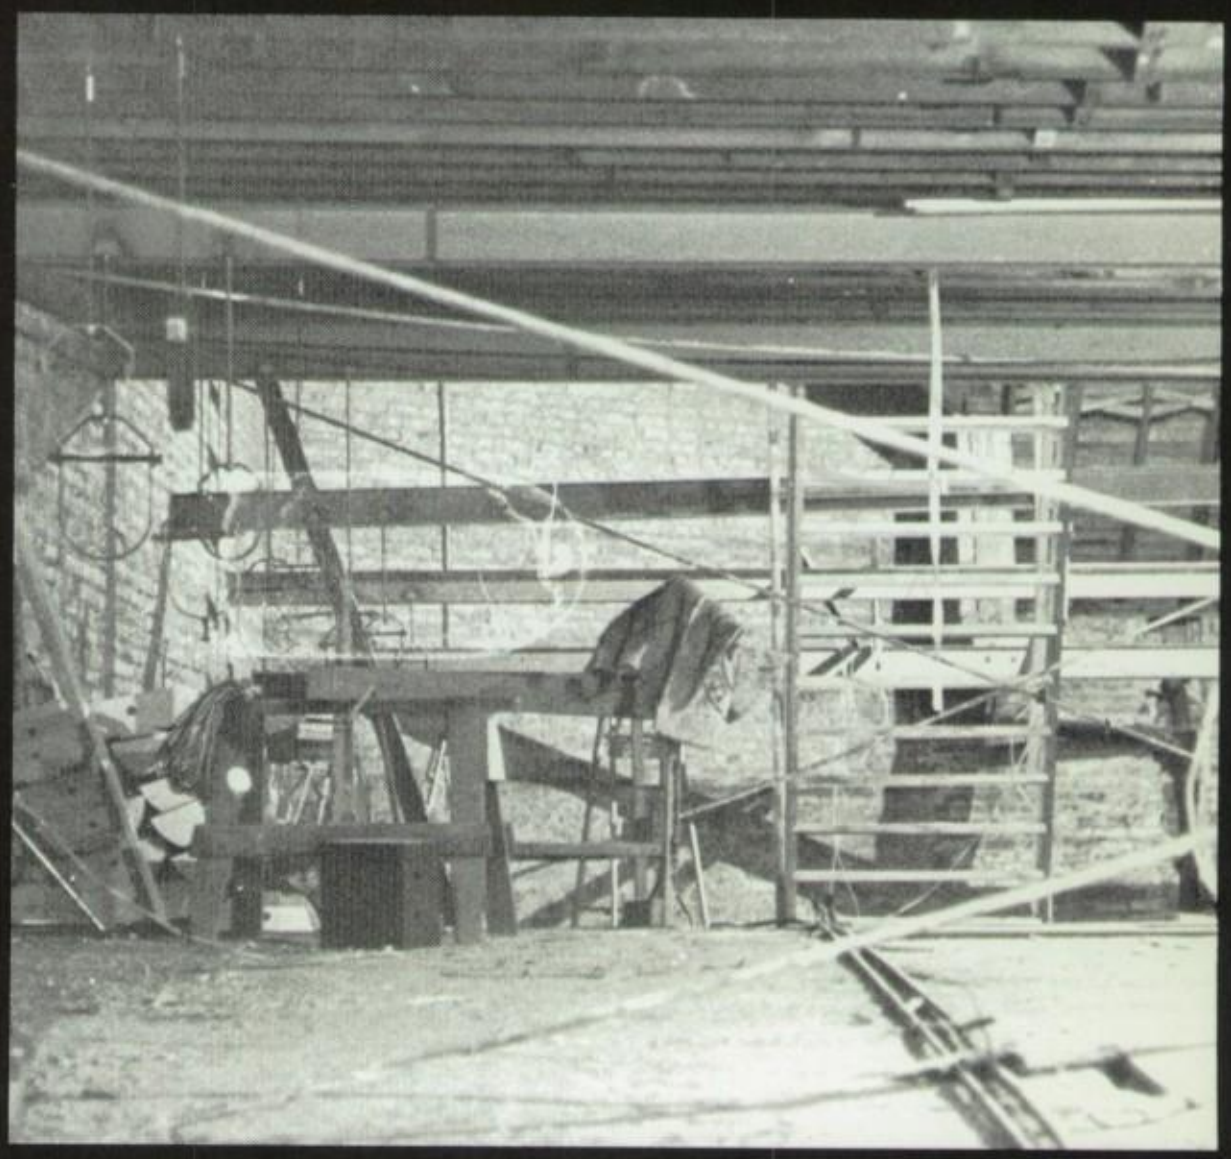
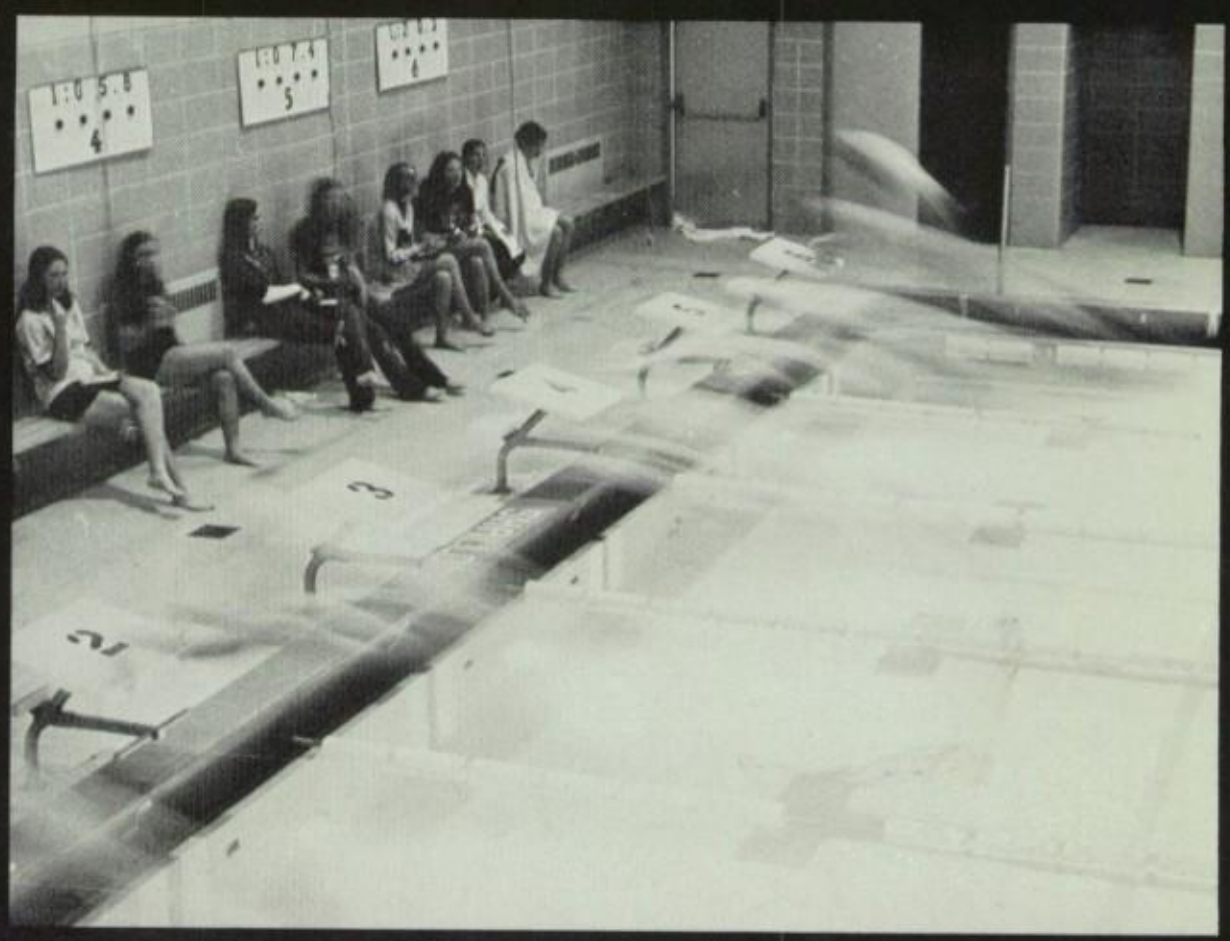
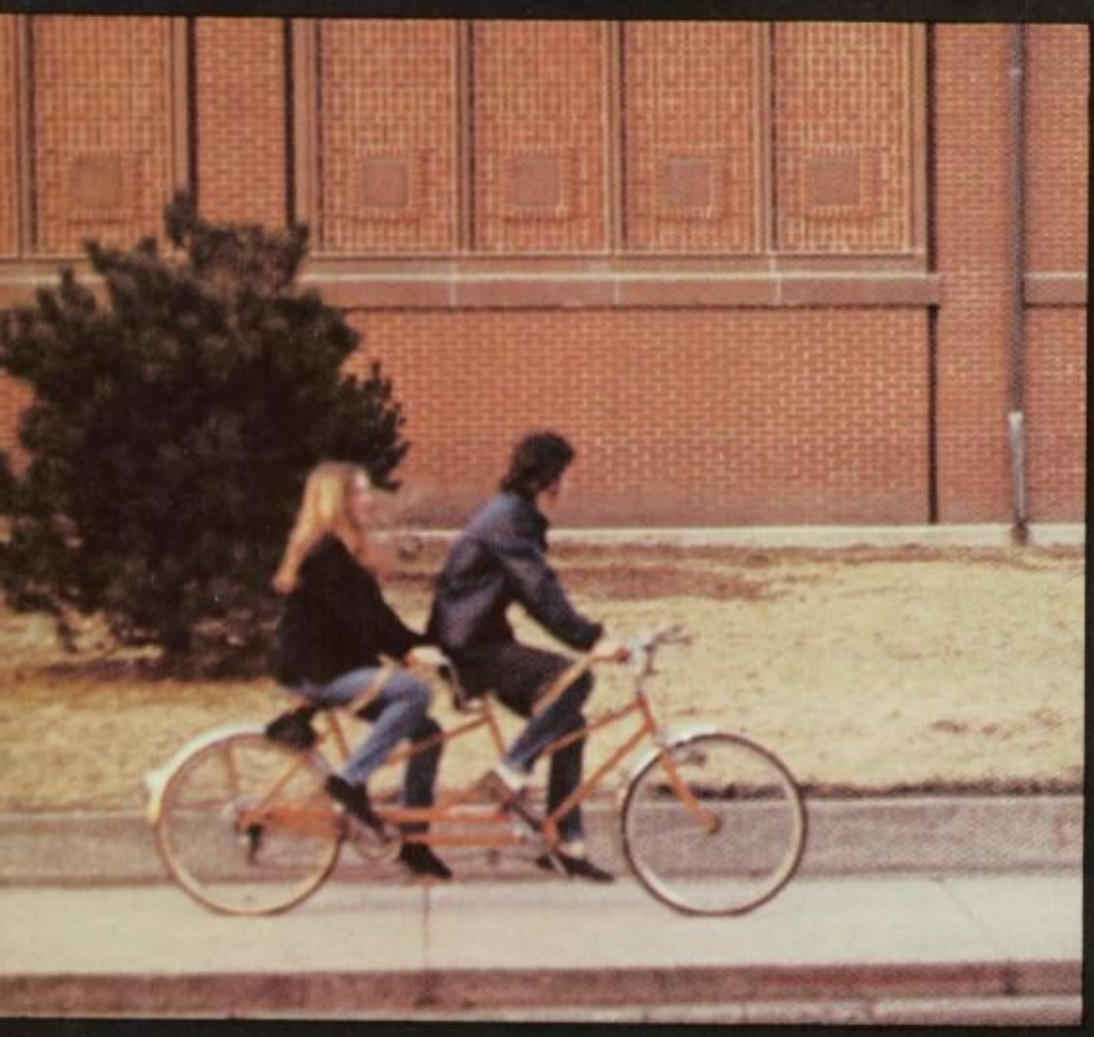
COINS & STAMPS

You wake up in the stillness of the morning, alone in your fuzzy world of just awake. You jealously hoard some thoughts for yourself, even if only to reflect on how tired your body is. This time alone reassures your mind of its identity and keeps your sense of self-worth intact. At school, at your job, at a game, you try to look as if you are having a good time even if you are not: you laugh easily, trying to meet new people, you hurry from place to place. But it is the moments alone that shape your vision of yourself.





The posters and slogans have twisted your perception into a distorted viewpoint. Love has been presented to you through a fish-eye lens of advertising schemes. Happiness is a yellow smile button, and if you wear it long enough you might be fooled into believing that the words and slogans of others really express yourself.



Some people tell you that you are too disagreeable and that you should try to make more friends, because friends are a measure of how great a person you are. Others tell you that you are disgustingly all-American and that you should try to make more enemies, because enemies are a measure of your individuality. You try to find the right proportion between friends and enemies in your life, having many friends but not compromising your ideals to avoid making enemies. There may be one or two people whom you genuinely like and who understand you; and since you value them as a reflection of yourself, you begin to value yourself more. Your friends know what you dislike; they know what to say when you are happy or sad; they know what to say when you are angry or upset; and, most importantly, they know when not to say anything at all.

Perhaps at Lyons Township High School there is a distorted relationship between realism and idealism.
Each student spends hours reading Emerson's "Self-Reliance" and Cervantes's Don Quixote, and if he believes hard enough he gets an A for his effort.
He is then shown that in the real live world he should think like everyone else, that radicals like Gandhi, Jefferson, and Jesus Christ who looked at "windmills" and saw something else, are illegal now.
Perhaps that's the way it should be . . .
but then again . . . .

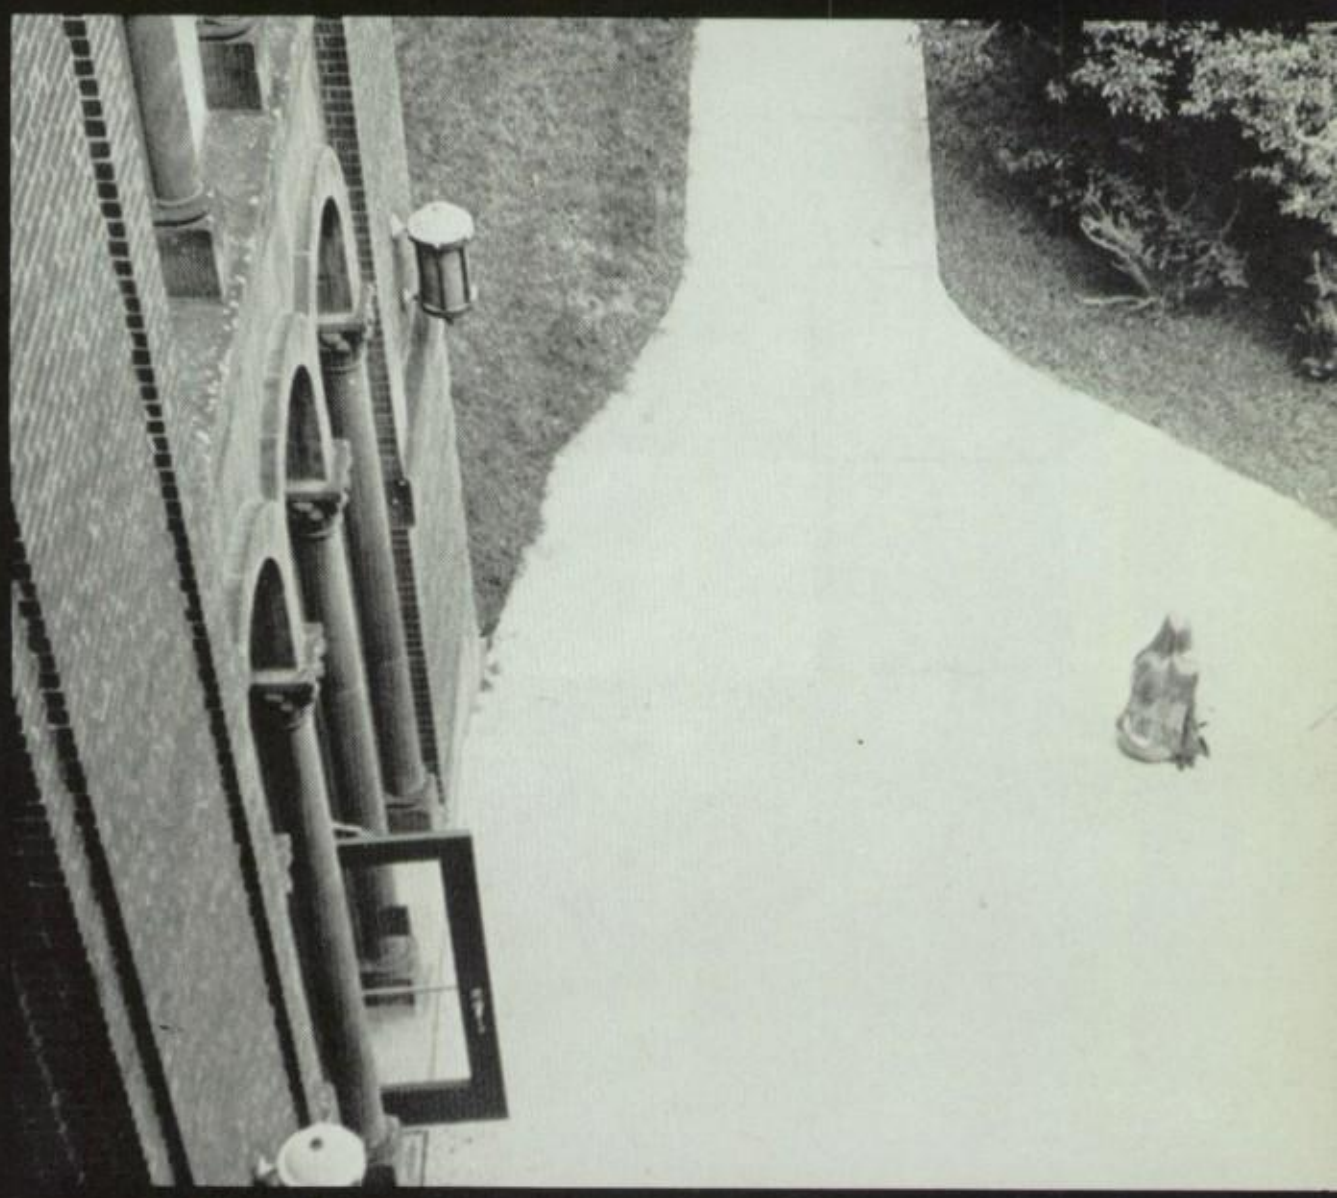
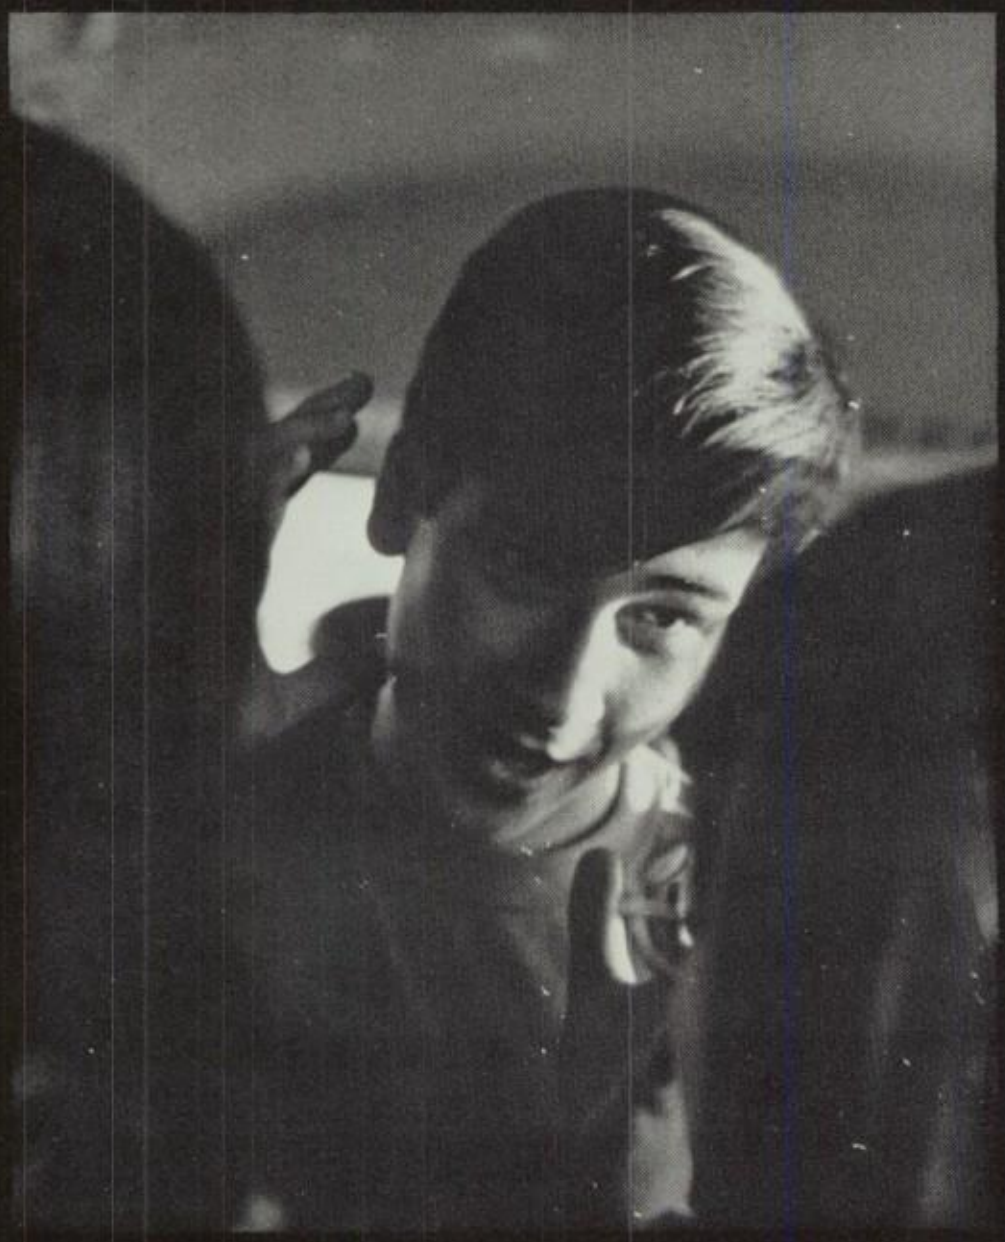
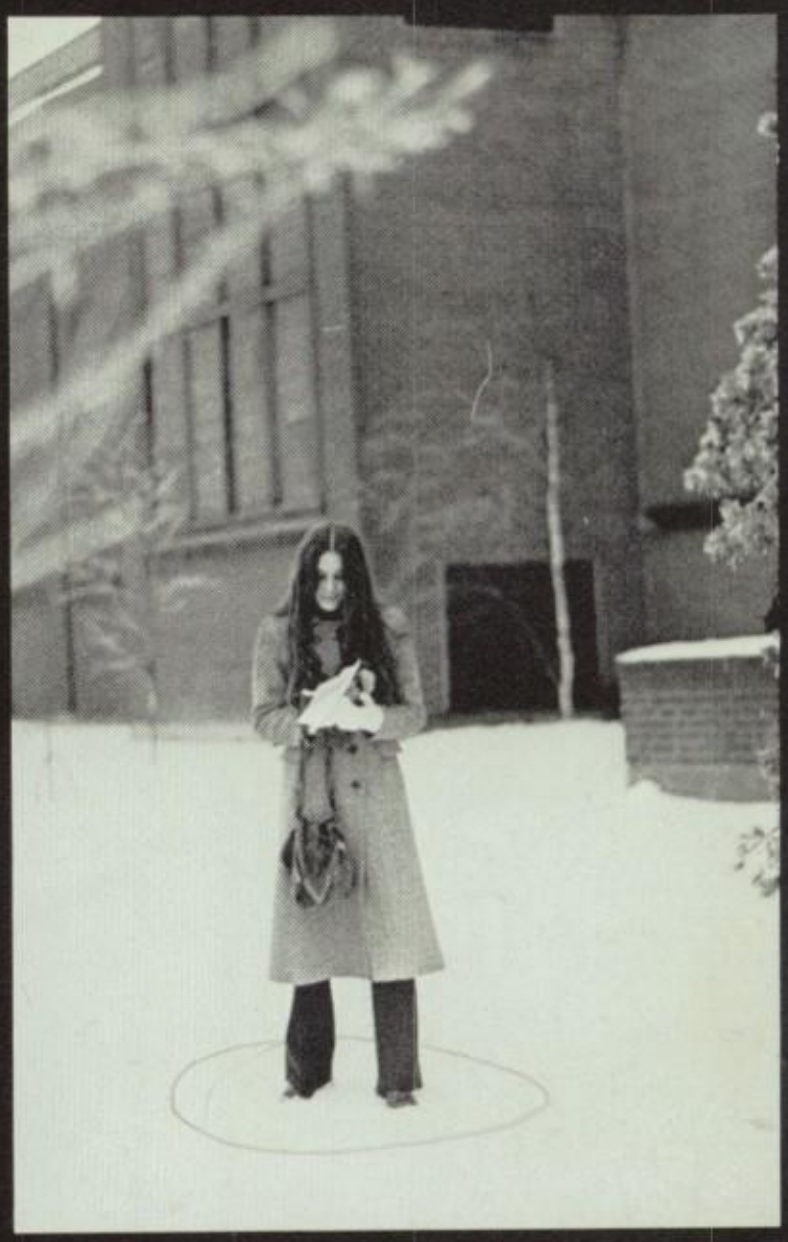
A high school student must be careful not to let six hours a day of learning how to spell hors d'oeuvres and rotate graphs distort his true education. The most important part of your education is learning as much as you can as fast as you can about people and yourself; and if you are truly educated, you know that you can never learn it all.



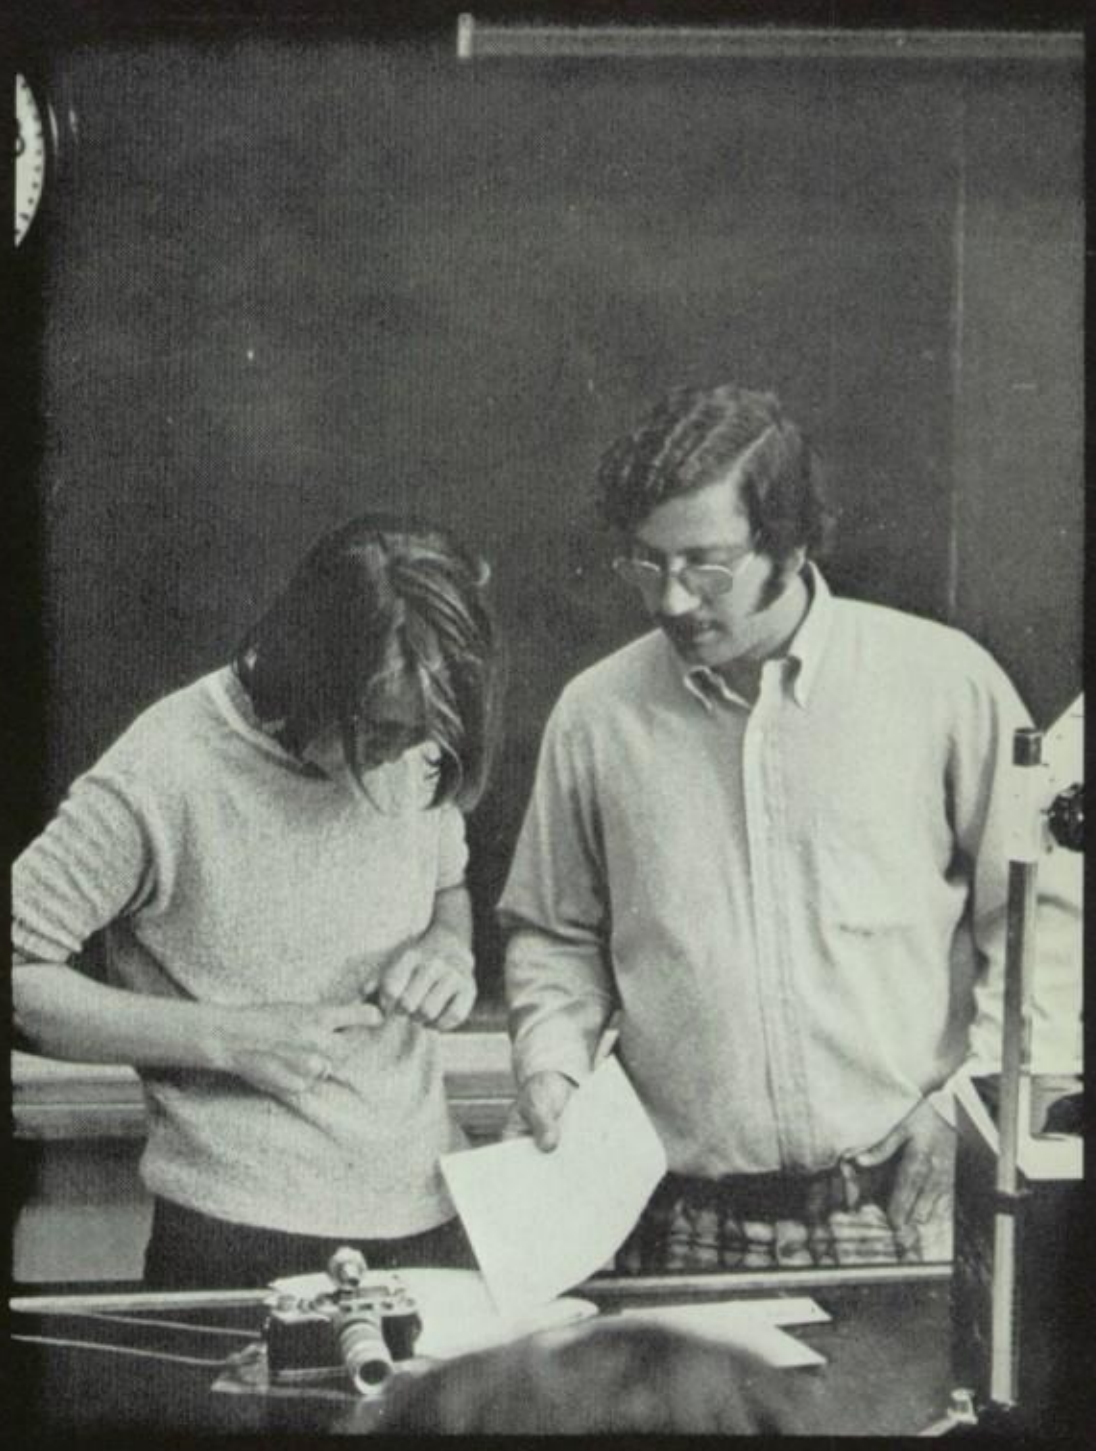


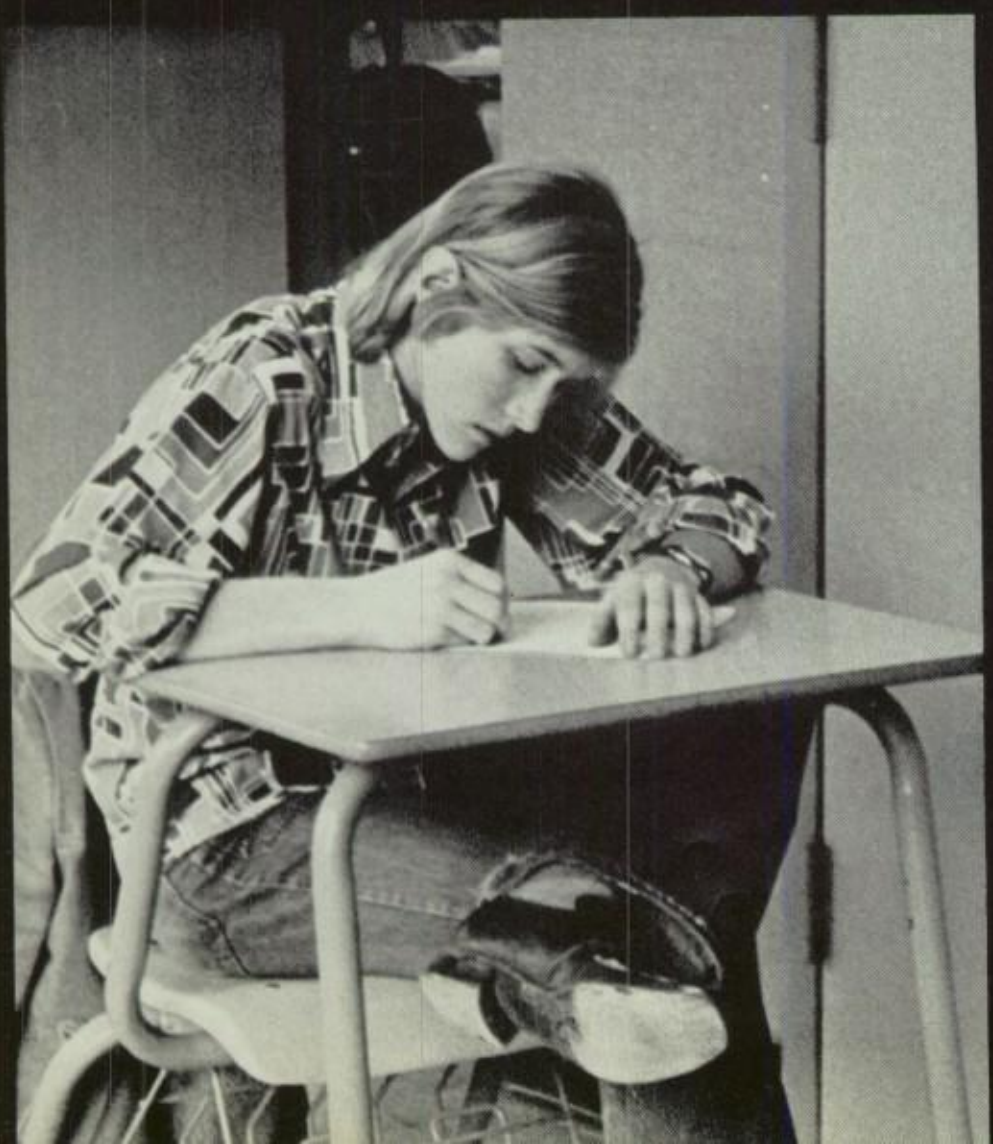


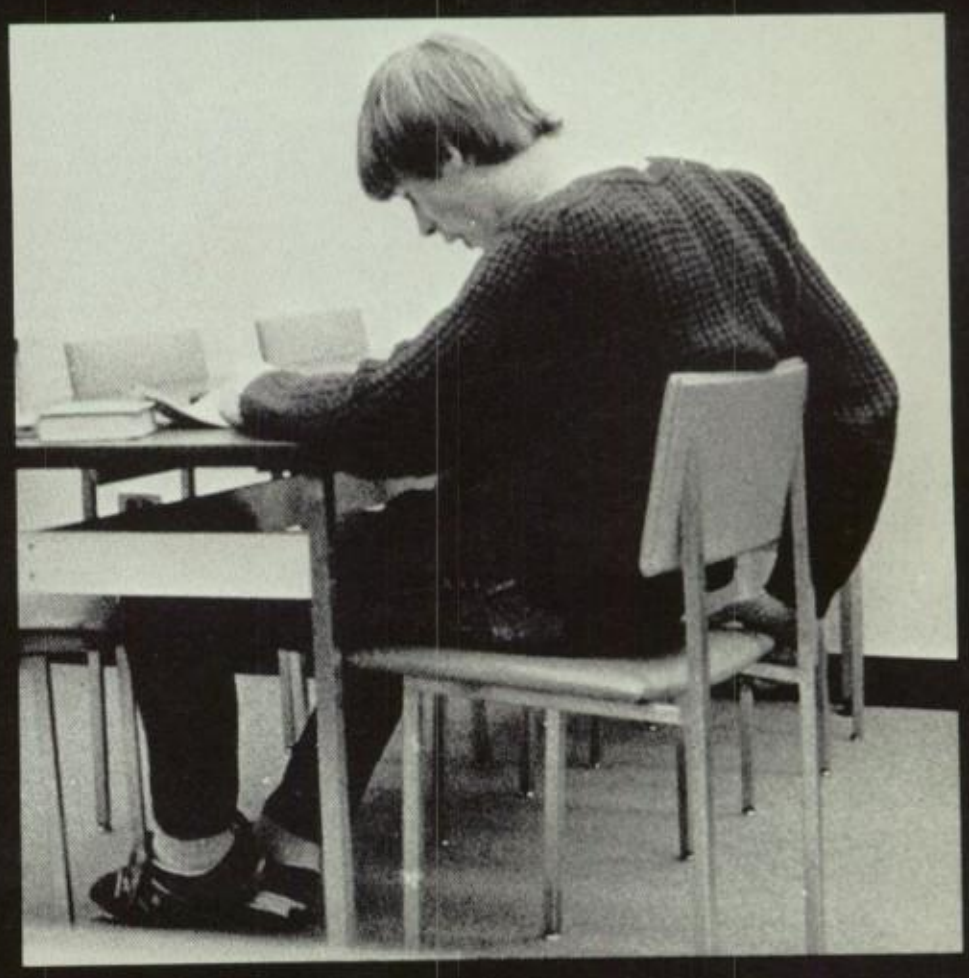
You have gone through another year at LT. And every day you were helplessly alone. You decide that next year, no matter where you are, you are going to make up for all the years of being an introvert. You are going to go out and ask out every person you see, and you are going to be the funniest person you know, and you are going to be the life of every party, and you are going to join every club so that you will always be in a crowd. And if you do it, instead of being alone by yourself, you will be alone in a crowd.

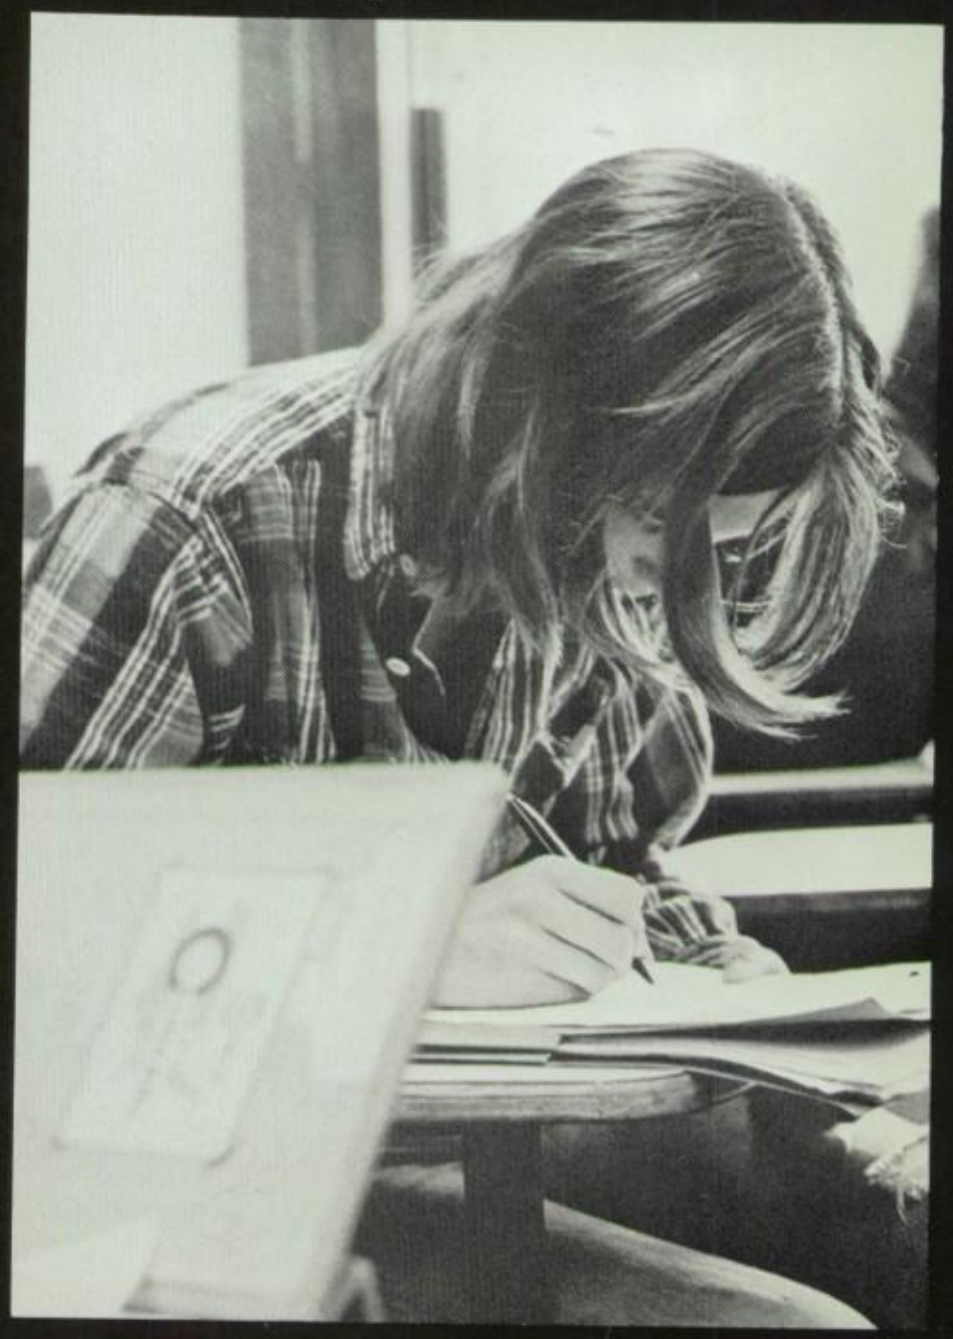
In four years of high school you will be exposed to every detail ever invented to baffle the teenage mind. For a few days, maybe even a week, you will remember some of them; but as time passes, so does memory.

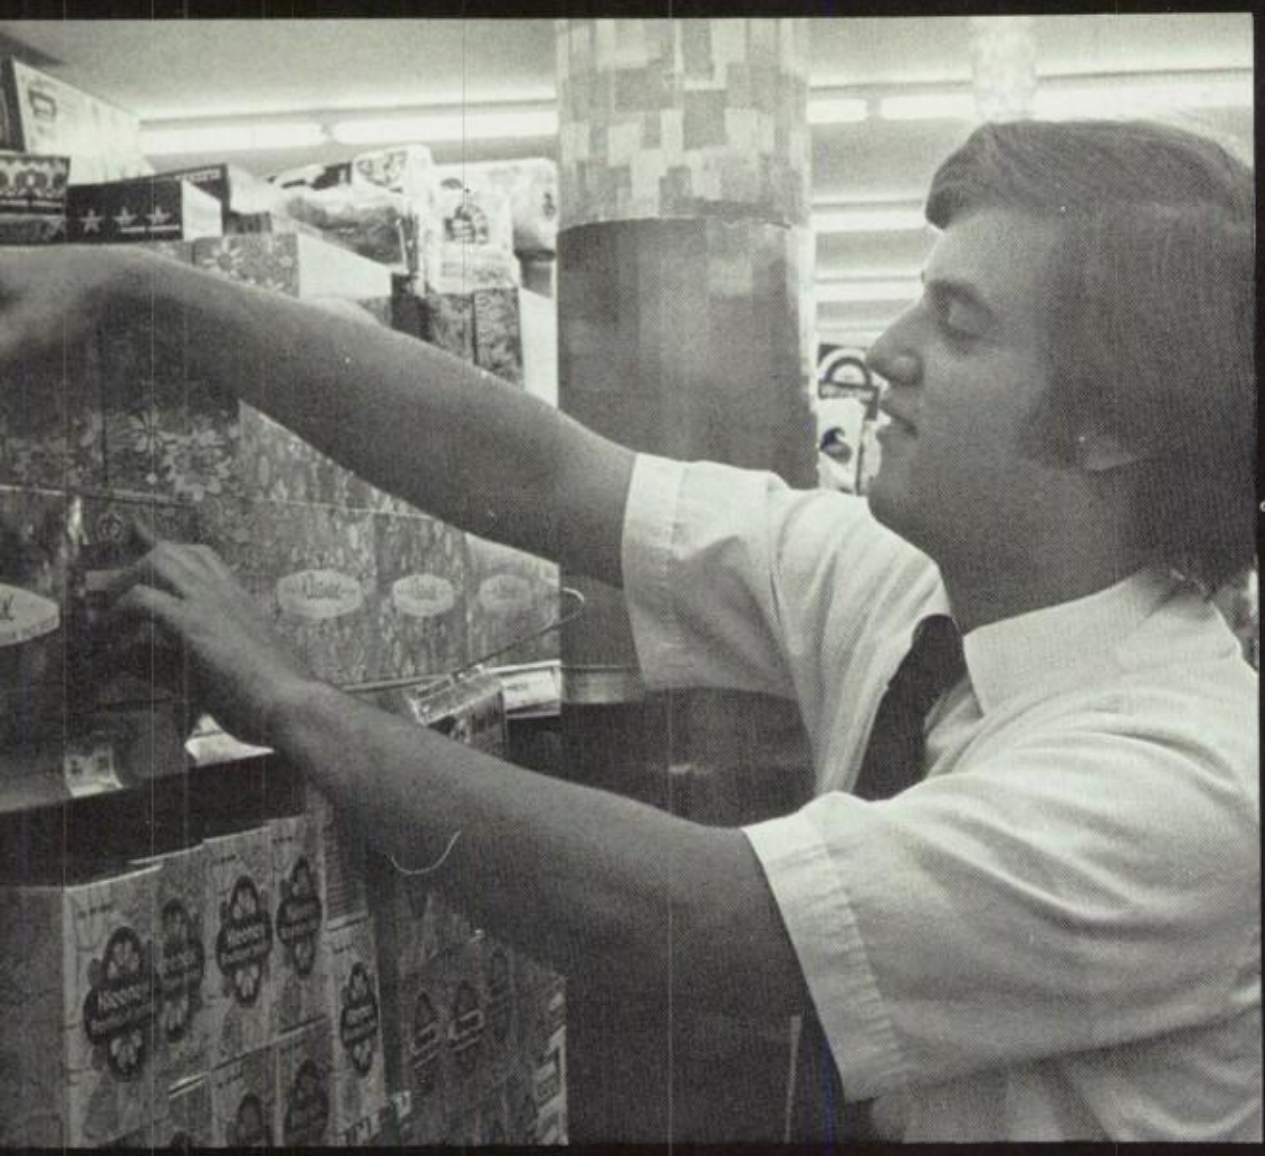
How many times have you talked to your parents and found out that you know so much more about American history then they do that it is ridiculous. They learned it once too. They forgot. You will forget too.



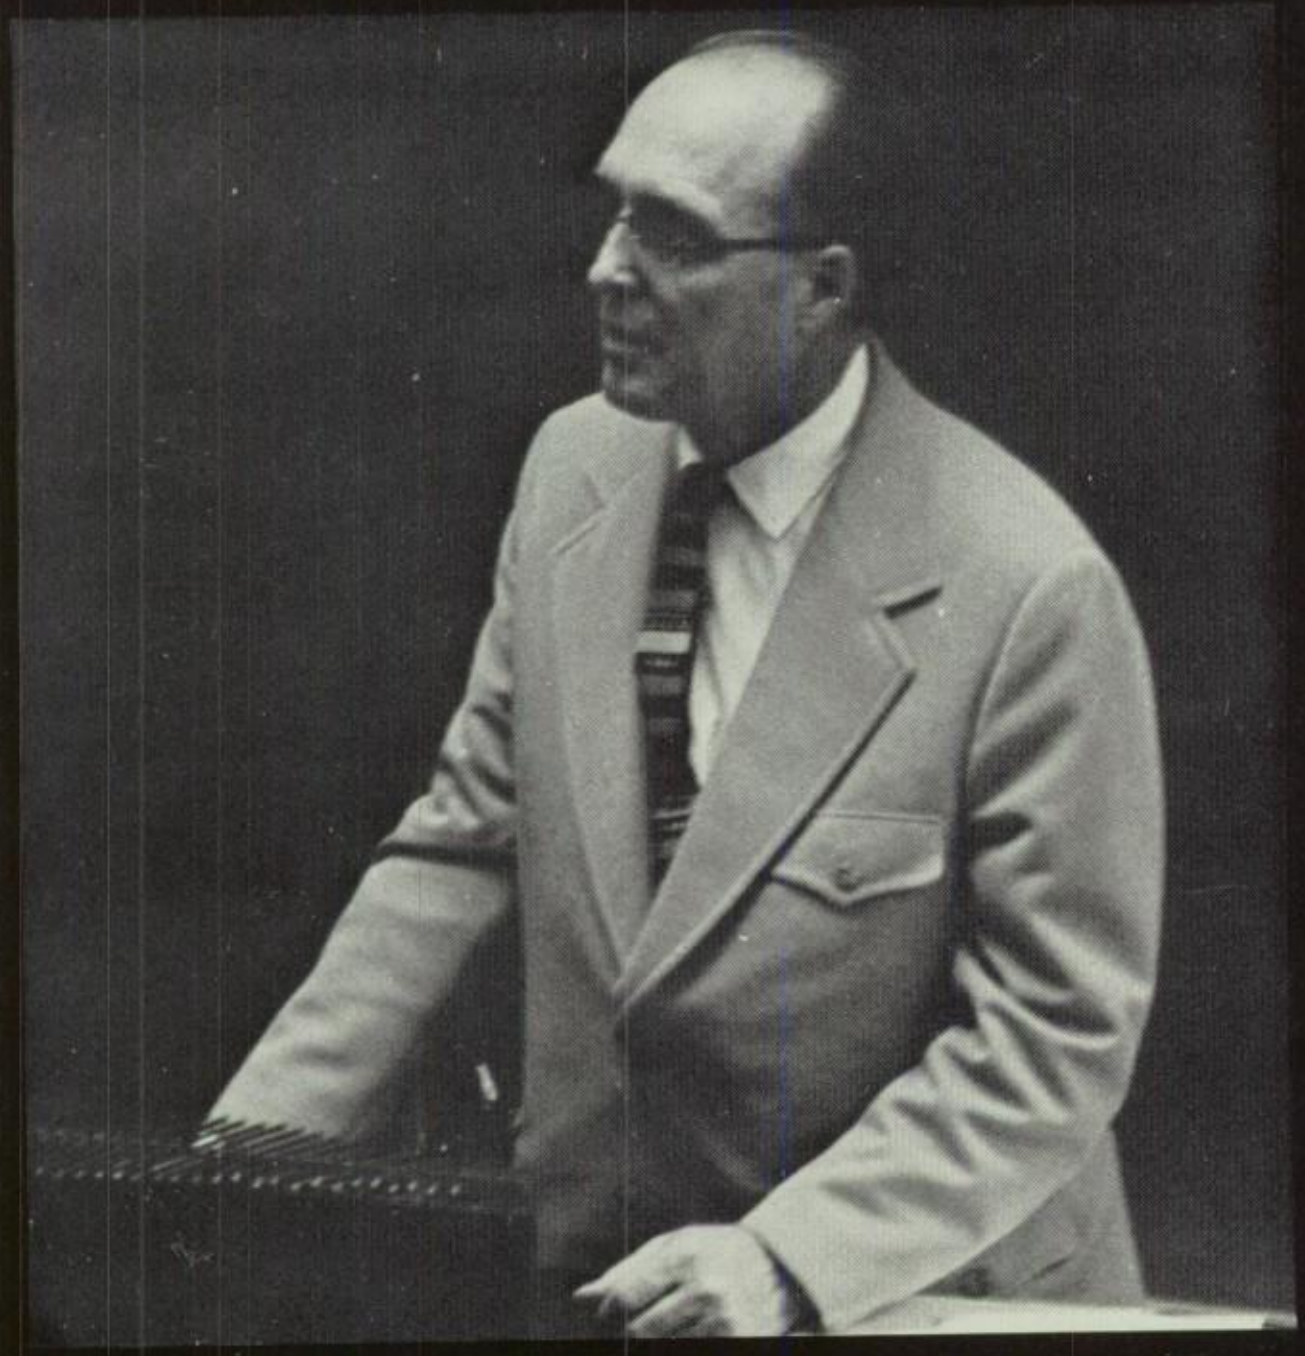




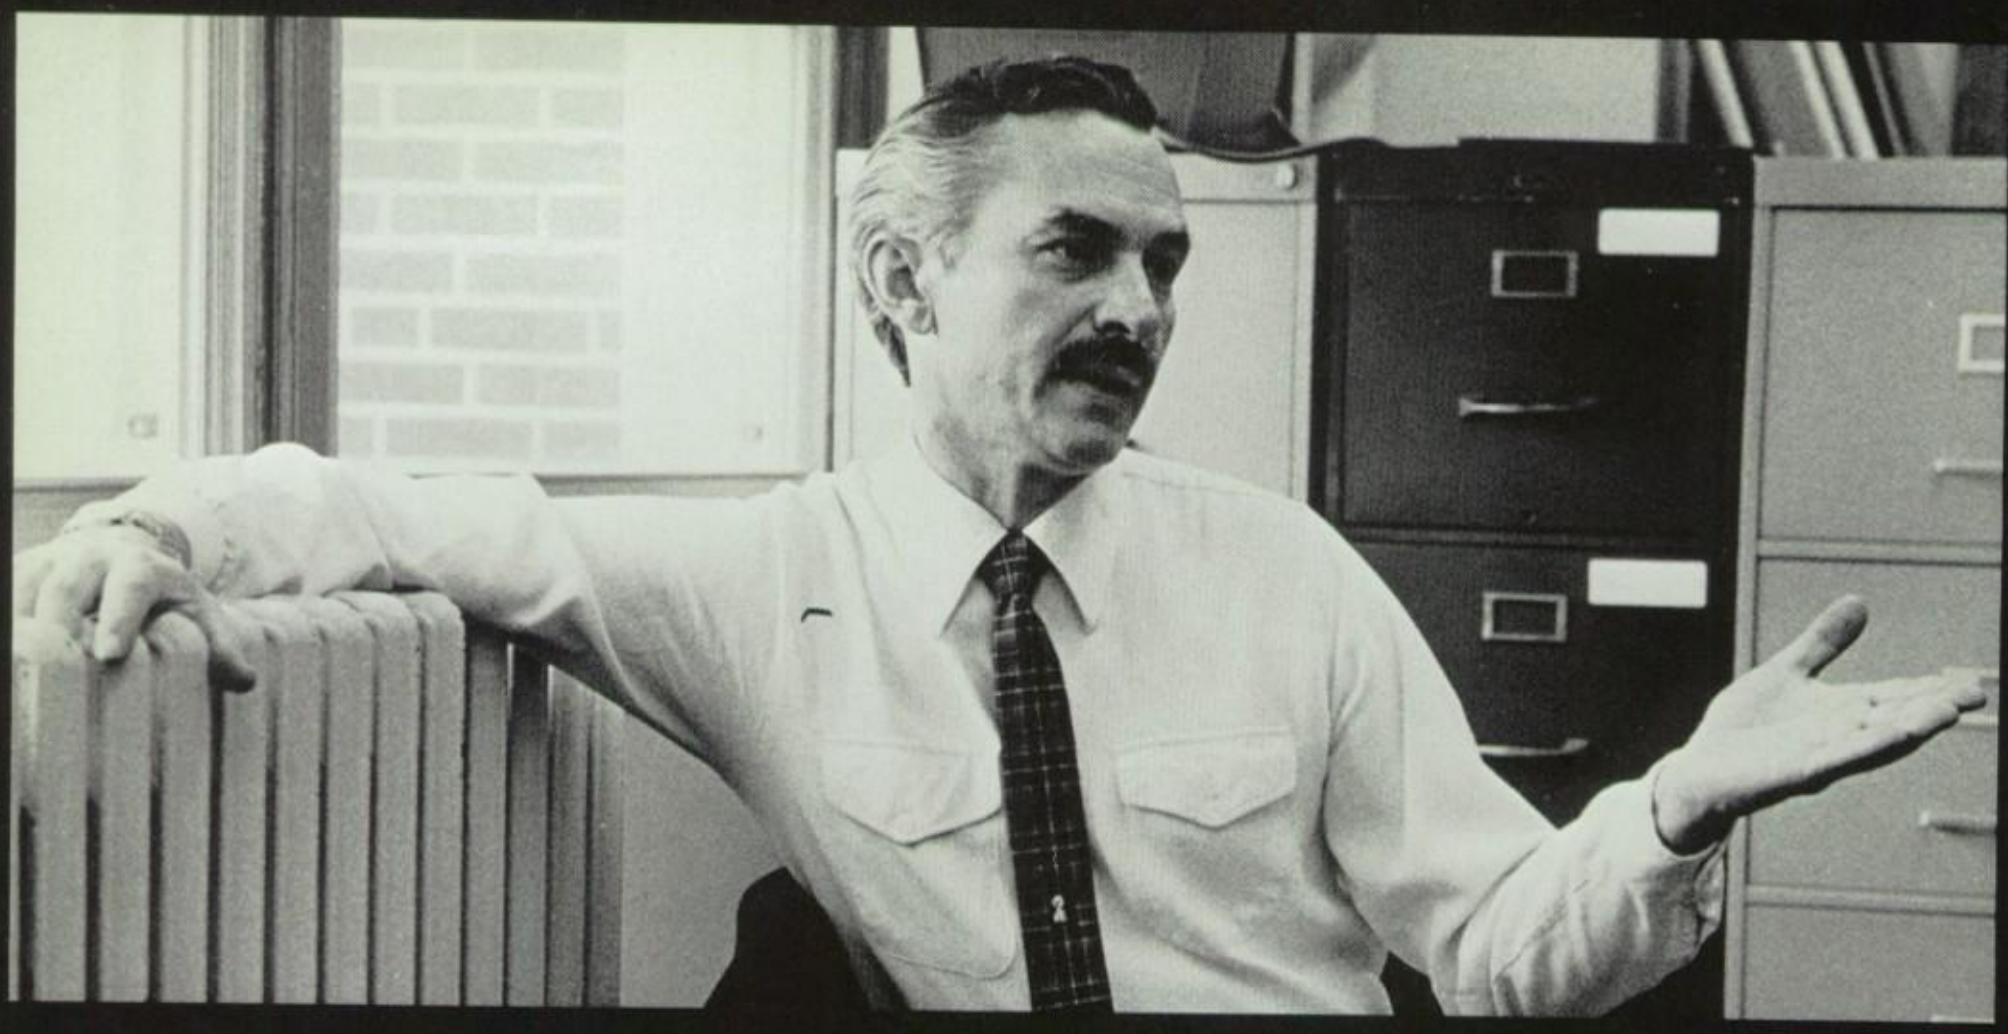


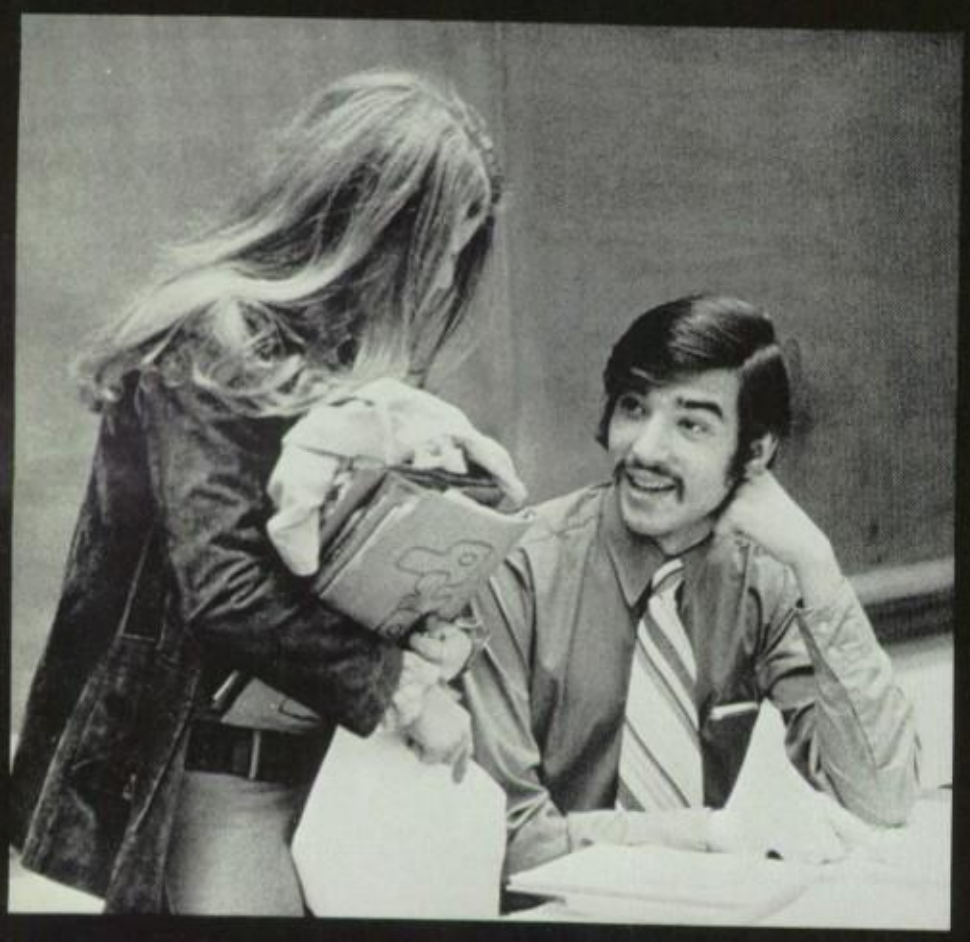


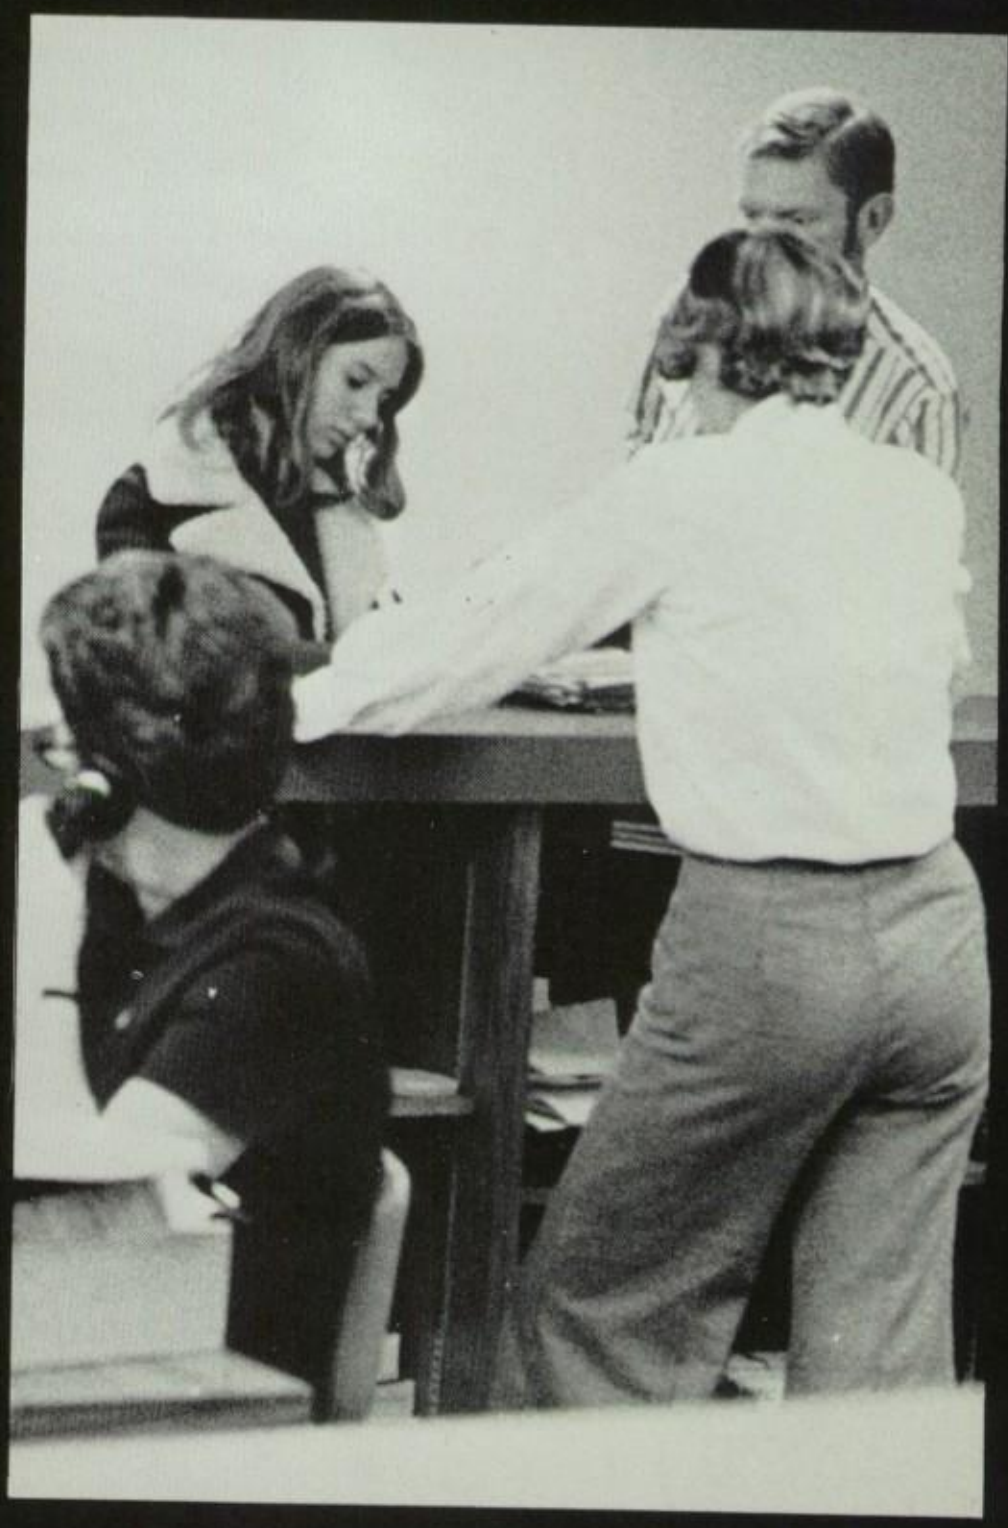
There are times when it seems you are waking up each day, going to school, doing your homework, and going to bed. Your parents tell you to take it easy, and your teachers say that for every hour of work you should have one hour of relaxation. If you listen to them, you find that there are not enough hours in the day for you to do everything you have to do and still have time to "enjoy yourself." You curse your existence and tell yourself that all you want to do is give up and leave, but you realize that someday maybe the hours will go so slowly and weigh upon you so heavily that you will curse the sunlight. You decide that you will try to rest more often, but you also convince yourself that not having enough time to live your life is infinitely better than having too much time to endure it.

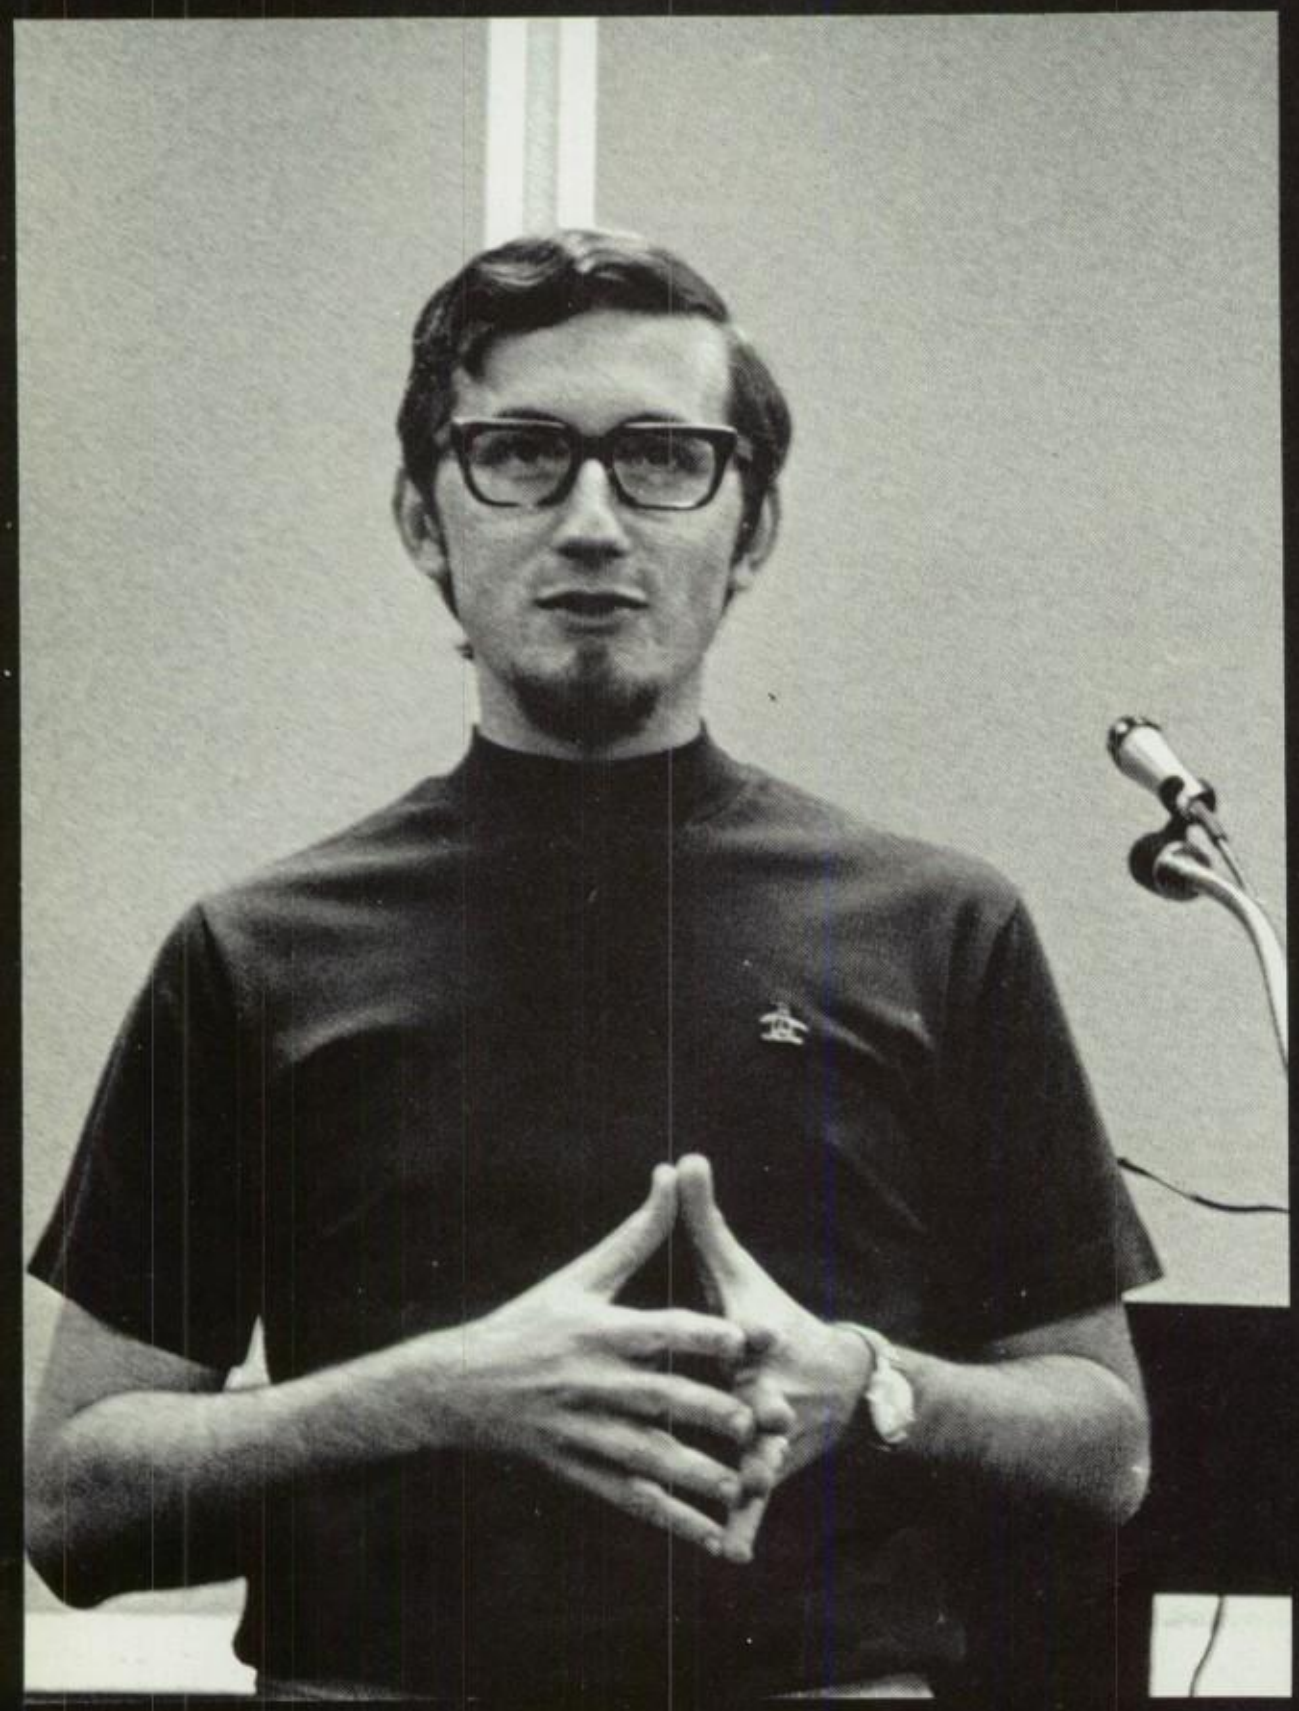


You have spent so much time in school it seems like a lifelong career. You sometimes admit that there is much left for you to learn, but sometimes your narrow world is distorted until you feel genuinely wise.
One day you learn something new, and realize how little you really know, how little experience you have. You grudgingly accept the idea that others know things too; and by accepting your ignorance, you have inserted wisdom into your life. Life is the realization that people need to grow, and by that realization to grow far more than their smaller selves thought possible, and by that realization, to see how far they yet have to see.









With every moment's worth of living, you are given at least an hour's worth of advice. If you have a decision to make, few will tell you what you should do. If you already made the decision, few will refrain from telling you what you should have done. Some of the advice that comes too late sounds so convincing that you are sorry you failed to think of it yourself, but you are also proud that you made the decision by yourself and that you did what you sincerely thought was the right thing.

You dream, you wonder. You have seen others stumble, fall, and leave their visions behind to become cynically sure of their own defeat.
But for now you imagine yourself becoming everybody's hero, the most envied success.
If you sometimes feel cramped, destined to be an average person, you push aside the doubts and hope failure does not become a way of life.

Your parents tell you that you will look back on these as the good old days. But it seems there is no time for nostalgia when you are greeted by the brick edifice each morning and enter LT to more brick-hard stares from classmates and teachers. The hours and days are unbearably slow, while the years whip past. Perhaps your perspective will change by the time you are older, or perhaps you and your generation are different and unique.

The dictionary defines administration as a group that "attends to another according to a prescribed formula." Opinions differed about applications of the prescriptions when the administration dealt with offenses by student desperados

Such episodes as the posting of guards to stop the hurling of "lethal" toilet paper at football games were viewed by many students as overdisciplining by the administration.

However, while lack of change was sometimes pointed out, some accomplishments of administrators were appreciated by students. Administrators expanded courses, allowed more field trips, and added credit/no credit courses. They initiated late arrival and early dismissal, changed comm and then, when the change was not accepted well, changed it back.

NC Principal Richard Ellis agrees that LT has faults that can be improved, but feels the school is more fortunate than many other schools. After 22 years of working and changing LT, he says, "It's still not all we wanted to do."

Confused, nervous language students, in attempts to make sense of foreign statements spoken much too quickly by their teachers, blurted out such translations as "The ear is drowning in the gravy" and Novice drivers cautiously rehearse range drills . . .

. . . while more experienced sophomores hit the road.

Drivers cruising in their "cars" at a constant three miles per hour were reminded periodically, "Be careful of ladies with baby carriages." The interruption was immediately followed by the appearance of a lady pushing a baby carriage. ("Isn't that the same lady I saw yesterday?") Brakes were applied and the simulator room erupted in a brilliant display of flashing red lights

The lady was toppled two hundred times a day by simulator classes. ("Isn't that the same lady I hit yesterday?")

The range was used to complement simulator learning. Cones representing garage walls and light poles were felled by confused students, unaware that their instructor could not be heard at 89 on the AM dial. After their range and behind the wheel experience, sophomores had mastered driving skills well enough to be loosed on the streets of Illinois.

Girls PE and the state of Illinois made a strike for women's lib this year with the legalization of girls interscholastic teams. Added to last year's teams were swimming, volleyball, bowling, basketball, gymnastics, softball and track. Three teams held state tournaments.

In class, the girls had choices between fencing ("Who needs fencing?") and softball ("Hope I'm not stuck there"), gymnastics

'But I'm such a clod'

and basketball ("I hate basketball.")

Juniors had choices between gymnastics and fitness, archery and volleyball. This year, the freshmen girls were also given a choice between soccer and field hockey.

A strong forehand ties the score for the gold team.

The big event of the year in the Boys Physical Education department was taking home gym suits to be washed for the first time since freshman year in preparation for co-recreational volleyball. In the boys' minds, though, the abounding joy of co-rec volleyball could not surpass the fun of endurance swims in the chlorine.

At South Campus freshmen and sophomores looked forward with anxious anticipation to the bi-annual running of the quarter mile. Besides the 440-run, the freshmen also endured six weeks of Health where they learned to give first aid to Mr. Armer's students.

Each day the 35 students at the special education evaluation and training center put together and packaged items for companies in the LaGrange area. Each student earned a wage for his work, and also participated in classroom activities, where he learned academic and functional skills in English, home economics and industrial arts.

of the training center's program were placement of its graduates in sheltered workshops or full time employment in the community. After graduation many students attended the Helping Hand School, but for some students, this was their last year of formal education.

Do you have questions about life? Do you wonder what it is like in the real "out there"? Do you want to enter the cold, cruel world gradually, instead of Aides, small cogs in the gears of the school, skittered from deans, counselors and other offices to classrooms on missions of mercy each day. Students in classrooms envied their friends let loose in the hall, but cringed when a dean's aide came to drag them away. Malicious grins of aides delivering the blue summonses reminded these students that neither pleas nor bribes

of friends could convince aides not to deliver the blue slip. Students may have decided to aide to miss study hall or to visit friends, but many inadvertently learned inner mechanics of the school. Security leaks, school news, and teacher gossip slipped through them to the students to make conversation more controversial for at least a day.

Ranking right up there with honors such as Illinois State Scholars and receiving a letter from Who's Who in American High schools, National Honor Society prestige was to 60 more seniors in early March. Along with the 60 students who made it junior year, they made up the group of students that the counselors thought were the best mixture of scholastic, athletic, and extracurricular activities. In addition to the honor of being appointed to National Honor Society, the members also received more tangible rewards for four years of doing homework and participating in class activities. These rewards included congratulations, pins, pats on the back, more congratulations, smiles from teachers, and more congratulations.

Twenty-three National Merit finalists had an ego trip this fall with the national recognition they received by scoring in the top one-half of one percent of seniors in the nation. Fifty-three students scoring in the top two percent were awarded Letters of Commendation, and they also were deluged by mail from every college in the country.

Even though the LT choir thought "All about the Blues," they remained singing with Mr. Lawler as long as he needed them. members, the most select singers in the school, even thought in music. After hours of vocalizing down the halls of LT, they wandered into practice to break into song. This year's Madrigals joined home economics classes to put on a Madrigals dinner, where all present recall the

Although Madrigals did not shatter fine crystal with their voices, they admit they managed to break a few dishes while cleaning up after the dinner.

Under the direction of Mrs. Luhring and her emphatic eyebrows, the sophomore choirs gave two big performances in the Fieldhouse. The Winter and Spring Festivals gave the sophs an opportunity to display to the public their vivacious vocal chords. In December, mass mess spread peace and goodwill all over and brought to mind Jack Frost nipping noses. In May their welcomed the birdies, flowers, and mud that springtime brings.

The freshmen were also given the opportunity to develop talented tonsils in Freshman Girls Glee Club, Freshman Boys Glee Club, and Freshman Mixed Chorus.

Jazz band brings a new type of spirit to basketball games.

Mr. Hilgendorf leads a brass ensemble during a game half-time.

On the last strains of "Gershwin" one can see Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers dancing their way into the hearts of millions. Other than dealing in nostalgia, band activities included pulling dirty wooly gloves and Reese's peany-butter cup wrappers from tubas, and marching in a "slight drizzle" over a

100-yard mud puddle

For the third year, band members of the class of '73 were televised in the Pet Parade. Stardom had its drawbacks, though, since the temperature inside a wool uniform on a warm spring day can get ridiculous. The sophomores also had the heat on for the Scout-O-Rama, but the freshmen were probably too nervous to notice the heat during the Memorial Day parade. The two concerts were, of course, fantastic, and, in the fall, as an added treat to Mr. Hilgendorf, the NC Band played "Happy Harry's Happy Birthday" for the encore.

After rigorous practice Dirk VanKoughnett adds luster to a concert.

The rousing ovation for Mr. Barber at the beginning of every concert was, of course, for his being a great conductor and an all-around nice guy. The loud applause at the end of each performance was for the high quality sound

from what Mr. Barber called "one of the finest orchestras in the state."

Players' opinions on their selections ranged from "trash" to "terrific," but all the members remained enthusiastic enough to continue through four public exposures: the Pops and Spring Concerts and the Winter and Spring Festivals.

Dreams of the United States sometimes turned to nightmares before Venezuelan AFS student Maria Eugenia Gonzalez arrived in Western Springs to stay with the Whitesel family. She later learned, though, that all North Americans are not hippies, and Chicago no longer harbors

Al Capone and his friends

Maria hopes to take new knowledge to Venezuela.

"I see what a developed country is like," she said "It is wonderful, but North Americans do not appreciate freedom since they only know democracy. Watching the United States has taught me about Venezuela. I want to share in your freedom."

Maria smiles at a question about Venezuela.

Inga laughs at a question about Iceland.

Inga uses gestures to help her English explanation.

"You have such big forests here in North America," said Inga Stefansdottir, ICYE student from Iceland, gazing at a 75-foot elm in her LaGrange front yard at the Browns' home. In the stark Icelandic climate a struggling forest often consists of several small shrubs. Inga found summer painfully stifling, and even the winter that Chicagoans curse was too warm for her taste. She described her hometown of Husavik as a seaside village of 2,000 where everyone knows everyone else, and where nearly half the year is stricken by

Here she found things different from her life at home. She was especially surprised at the variety of shapes, sizes, and colors United States citizens come in.

Inga ponders as she prepares to make a statement.

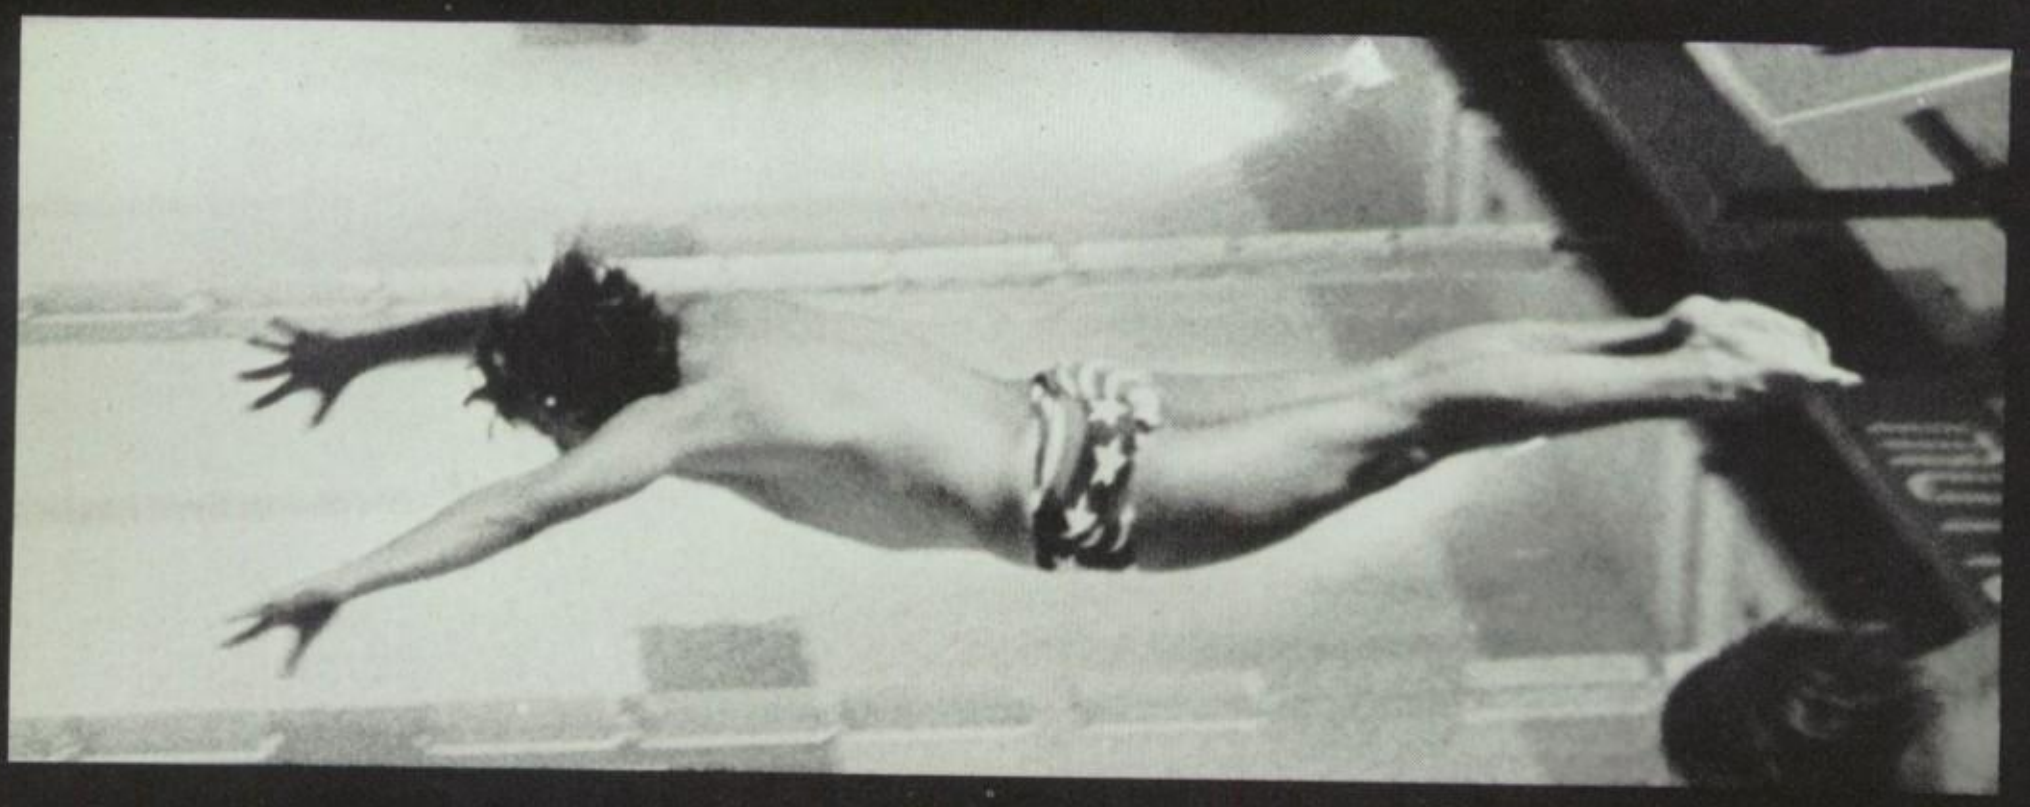
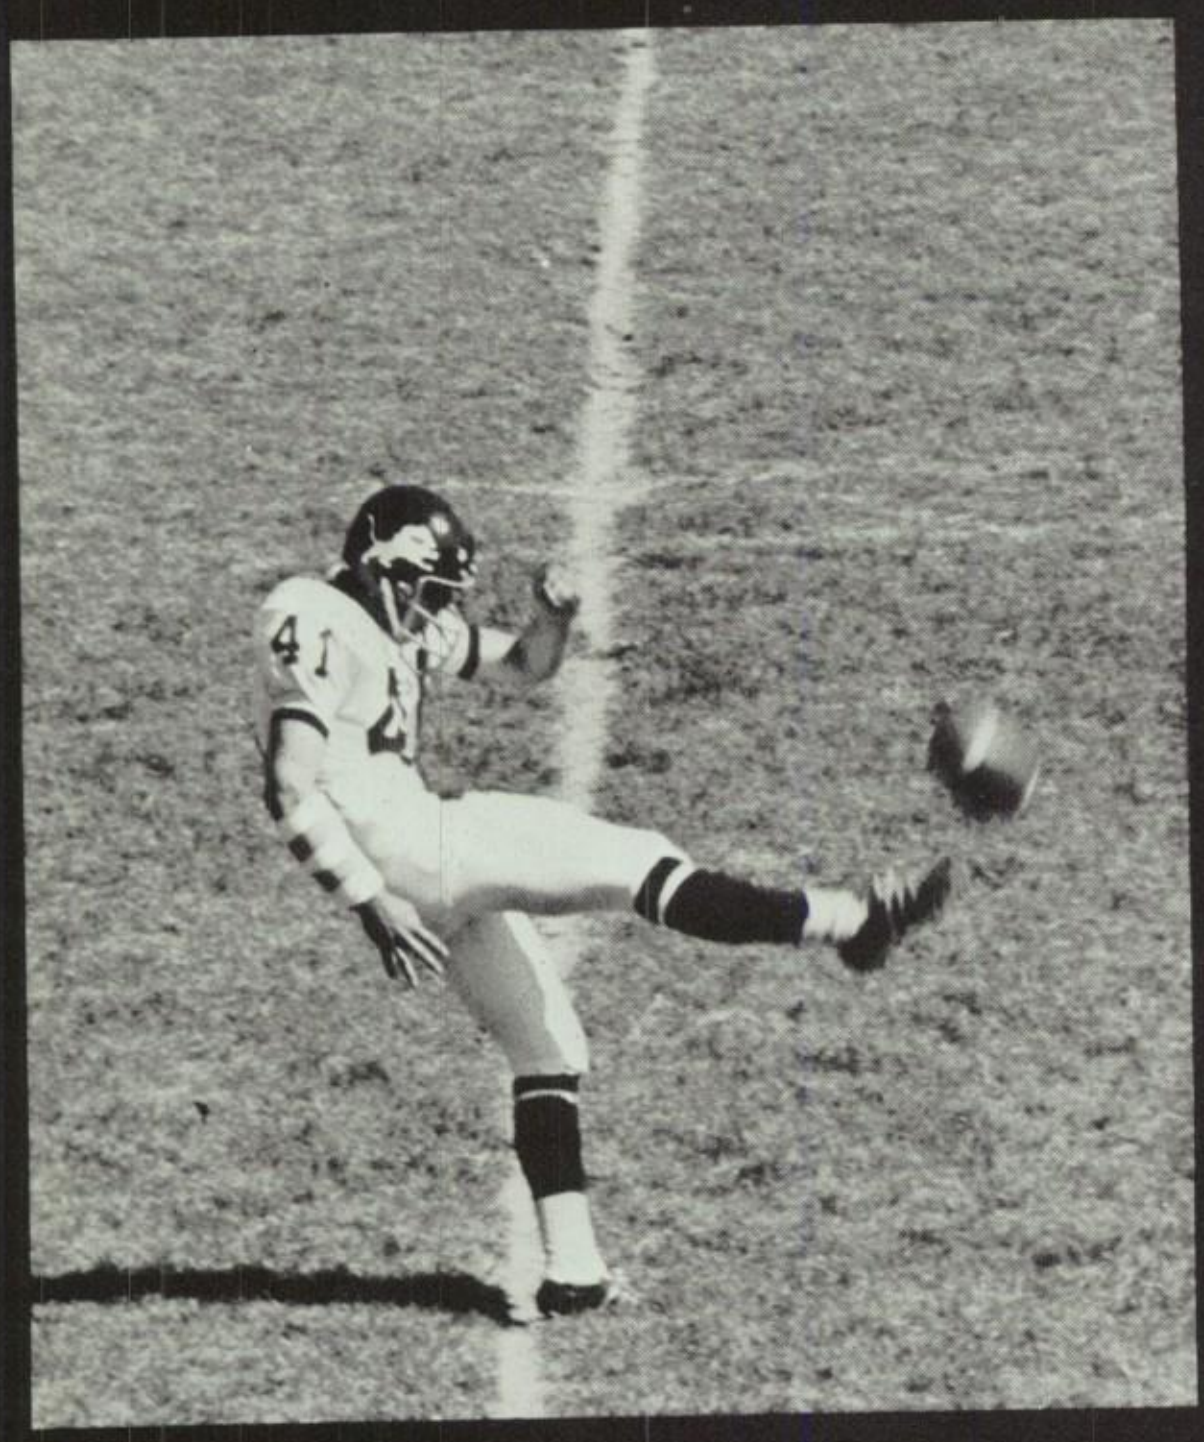
after school

If there is one thing you don't want to do, it is to stick around school any longer than you have to and stare at the 402 walls and 5200 faces. But you would rather not go home to chores, homework, or the reruns either. You convince yourself it is time to join some club or sport or participate in the Second Annual Ping-Pong tournament or something; and when you do you find that you actually enjoy all the new faces and experiences. After your activity ends, you appreciate those reruns for about a week until once again you look for something to do after school besides getting bored.





In the Homecoming pep assembly entitled "A Night on the Town," students were relatively unexcited by the mobile hips of Elvis Presley and the Osmond Brothers, but the field house went with the appearance of Ozzie and Harriet. But where were Ricky, David, Wally, Beaver, Dobie, and Maynard?

The grand prize winning float of the Homecoming parade was an enormous, nonflushable commode made by the Class of '73. The day's football game was an enormous success, despite subversive rice-tossing beatniks, as the Lions tromped Downers Grove North for the team's first conference victory by a 37-13 score.

Although the varsity football team suffered from such maladies as torn ligaments, pneumonia, and sore muscles, the team grunted its way through the season. "The games were all fought gallantly," said Coach J.O. Jackson, "and the boys showed the kind of spirit we should apply to our lives'

The team was not victorious at most of its games, but Coach Jackson felt the season was "a moral success."

The freshman football players pulled together as a team and posted a 4-2 record. As with frosh teams of old they endured Coach Leiber's emphatic onslaught, 'Jeeeez, you guys!'

Kind and energetic sophomore football players helped Coach Suchomel celebrate his birthday by treating him to a leisurely swim in a mud puddle. This and other diversions helped soften the disappointing blow the Cubs received when they ended in third place after four landslide wins at the start of the season. After an interim of three losses and a tie, the sophs rebounded in the last game to beat Proviso West 14-0.

Most people do not enjoy having their hands stomped on or being kicked in the shins, but soccer players learned to live with the pain. Some consolation was the big crowds that came to watch them trounce their opponents. Not only did the soccer team win fourth in state, but they had a good time doing it. Seniors psyched up and went animal over

The sophomore basketball team stormed out of freshman obscurity this year to prove what

romping, stomping dynamite

they were by tromping 17 opponents and winning the conference championship. This feat was not accomplished without the help of freshmen, though, for they contributed a forward whose name is slightly reminiscent of a World War II Luftwaffe pilot (or a White House aid), Konrad Kaltenbach.

Obviously, with new coach Paul Omi building their bodies into Mack trucks, and all around good guy John Arends being an inspiration to all, the varsity gymnastics team couldn't lose. Unfortunately, they did. The team did not put it all together until the district meet. Gymnasts thrilled to hear Coach Omi affectionately call, "This is over-load week, time to beat up your bodies' and "C'mon you guys, it's mind over matter. I don't mind and you don't matter." Team members learned to bear that fleeting moment of pain when half a hand ripped off or some unnecessary bone in the foot or hand broke.

The freshmen and sophomores also had to learn to open doors with their elbows because of the pain in their hands and ignore the laughter as they walked bowlegged because of shin splints. Coach Ingersoll drove them to an 11-2 season and said he felt confident about next year since most of the competitors this year were freshmen.

Despite the images projected on TV, the wrestling team was not made up of overweight actors with such names as The Bat or Igor Vodik. In fact, Coach Vern Allers warned his wrestlers to stay "lean and mean" and not to "eat no garf" or "drink no scarf" for fear of being "slower than a two-day-itch" when it came time for a match. Practices were peppered with shouts like "Holy Canole, and "Do an outside gramby. No, do an inside amby. Look out for the sideways Bambi," but witticisms such as, "What's a gramby?" and "Who cares about grambies? What's a canole?" were the usual responses.

Admiring girls screamed words of encouragement all year long in attempts to draw a smile from their favorite hunk on the swimming team, while those Sea-lions who went unnoticed paraded around in devilishly minute swimsuits and looked muscular

The cheers were not only for the healthy appearance of the team, but also for the fact that the swimmers were laud-worthy in the water as well as out. The main attention-getters were the relay teams, Brad Vear's butterfly, Mark Wintercorn's backstroke, and Jim Lyon's double backward inside-out somersault twists with a difficulty factor of 32. Near the end of the season, though, the swim fans were forced to cheer in the privacy of their own living rooms as the team was televised as they streaked to third place in state.

Sliding through another season of spring mud, the Babe Ruths of the future had a great time hitting home runs over opponents' heads. Coach Lieber was ecstatic with the success of the team when he said, "They did a good job." He especially appreciated the pitching team which tried valiantly to sizzle in the hot ones to catchers with hands like hams from stopping 70 mile an hour rocket balls. Although rain caused several games to be postponed, the season did come to an end with the LT team victorious over many of their old arch enemies.

The sophomores under Coach Burson decided not to let the varsity show them up and they delivered many a last inning comeback to trounce the other teams. With good freshmen, Coach Burson is looking forward to next year and an even better team.

To the surprise of many, LT linksters did not join together as a band of chain-makers. Instead, these boys spent thrilling mornings puttering around golf courses at 5 a.m. The daring divoters

played five games, using the scores of the best four and throwing out the fifth.

Hopes were to repeat the conference title held for the past two years. Toughest competition was from Hinsdale Central. Of the ten LT players, only two were on the team last year. But these two, Craig Culbertson and John McKay, got great support from the eight first-year players.

For those students who thought happiness was a puck in the ear or a stick in the face (or your fist in someone else's face) there was the opportunity to join the new hockey team, made up of LT students although not school sponsored. The vicious hip-checkers (not necessarily their own hips) skated and fought their way to a once-defeated season and second place in the Chicago area hockey league. Scoring opponents were dealt with by Allen Ernst, who holds the league record for the most goals, Jim Green, and Brent Slezak, while were handled by goalie Bill Milner, who holds the world record for most stitches in a single evening.

Goalie Mark Samuelson swoops in front of the puck to prevent a goal.

Contrary to popular opinion, water polo is not a game played on horses with webbed feet. The only participants on the LT water polo team (record of 2-1) were swimmers who threw the equivalent of a soccer ball around in attempt to score points. While they played, they pretended that they were not attempting to inflict severe,

permanent injury

on the opponent who was foolhardy enough to offer up his body for at least a good kick by venturing too close. To those who escaped kicks there were always the dunks. Amazingly, with all the time spent submerged by opponents who thought drinking and swallowing chlorine was good for one's health, there were no cases of the bends.

The track team put the shot, and ran, and poled the vault, and ran, and broaded the jump, and ran. And after that they ran some more.

Seniors Jim Docherty and Dave Allen were rated second and third in state respectively while the indoor team was undefeated in dual meets. The varsity also defeated state champ York on their way to victory in the conference meet. All the accomplishments of the team were, in effect, a tribute to the inspired leadership of Coach Max Armer, and they looked forward to the outdoor season with confidence.

The sophomores were also undefeated in dual meets during the indoor season with the guiding hand of Coach Kilbreth at the helm.

With lots of loves, aces up their sleeves, six returning lettermen, and returning twins as coaches, the LT tennis team hoped to improve upon last year's eighth place finish in state. As usual, though, both varsity and sophomores had to compete with unstoppable Hinsdale to see who knew

The best service on the LT team was supplied by Steve Bogdanoff, who played second singles as a freshman and played first singles and was the star of the team as a sophomore. Senior John Hook secured the second singles spot at the start of the season with the rest of the spots being up for grabs.

When you walk down the hall and see one huge, overpoweringly impressive muscle striding the corridor beating off girls with a stick, you probably are looking at a real live Letterman. To investigate this original guess at identity, first go up to the muscle and say, "Golly, are you a Letterman?" If it fails to respond, search its form for a golden letter stapled somewhere on its body

If you fail to find one of the much-vied-for decorations, check for medals. If you find none of these, tell it you are at a sports event. See if it pulls out a rope and looks for fans to contain. This is a sure way to detect a Letterman. See if it can hold a rope. If it can, you've found a rare combination of strength, good looks, and modesty that LT calls a Letterman.

Mark Loehrke on tip-toes tries to stuff Joe LaGro's plunging leap toward the basket.

Chosen Few was not the name of the returnees to President Nixon's cabinet nor those people at LT in the Donny Osmond fan club, but was the name of the champion team of the intramural basketball league. Along with Chris Benjamin's Few there were the fans of The White Sox and people who backed opponents of Mayor Daley; the Wood Peckers, avid fans of Woody; and the Wallbangers, relatives of Harvey. A serious challenge was offered to the Chosen Few by the Black Devils and the Stone Heads, while the Annihilators got annihilated, the Blue Ribbons got shredded, and the Stars shot and missed.

Along with basketball there was also intramural volleyball, softball, and football, in which the Dingbats triumphed.

When not engaging in leisure time mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, LT Guard members assaulted the school's big-spenders for the swim-a-thon and sometimes managed to extract a promise of a nickel for every ten miles completed or a penny a lap. The object of the contributions was the purchase of electronic touch plates for the pool. When not soliciting money, members suffered from sprained bodies

often as a result of a rousing "Maul Ball" game, an activity from which no one exits unhurt.

A prerequisite for Guard was to be a Red Cross Senior Lifesaver. During free time guards taught grammar school children to swim and were especially careful to reiterate a modified version of the direction on the pool wall: "Don't do it in the pool."

This year sundry girl jocks who joined PE teams had the chance to demonstrate strength and co-ordination. These girls bounced, trounced, and exerted such pizazzz that males were totally mesmerized into ultimate admiration of female grace and dexterity. Bowling belles made it through the year with no broken toes

Track and field tomboys and fillies ran, hurdled, and put the shot swirling.

The major purpose for sports was to give students chances to compete, but coaches were determined not to model girls sports after those the boys have had for years. They hoped to eliminate the high competition of boys sports. By getting a later start, they say, they may benefit by a more modern approach. Hopes are for a set of teams that will be open for most girls interested.

This year there were ten sports for LT girls. They were: archery, tennis, swimming, volleyball, bowling, badminton, basketball, gymnastics, softball, and track and field. Although the sports were well accepted and many girls participated, some features were still in the planning stages.

GAC followed in the Munich tradition of awarding honor and greatness to athletes. Any girl who participated in GAC got a medal at the spring presentation that the club made. These girls were the counterparts of the boys who their way through a year of intramurals. The girls who wanted a medal had a wide choice of activities to choose from. As sports seasons changed, so did GAC activities. Many girls participated in both a fall and spring sport.

"Everybody out for exercises! Ready?" Leading unenthusiastic girls in vigorous exercises was only a small part of the indispensable aid Senior Leaders volunteered for the PE department. They also spotted gymnasts and refereed basketball games. In co-rec volleyball they mystified senior boys with

Rumor has it that Lionettes is an advanced course for those hoping to major in telling time. Lionettes, who spend most of their time with stop watches, supposedly could only join the club after taking Little Hand I, Big Hand II, and

Now come on gang. Let's really hear it for those vocal sweeties in the letter sweaters, the cheerleaders. You know—the ones that used to stand down front at sports events? Because the cheerleaders braved the toilet-paper artillery, let's really stamp our feet and stand up and holler for them. Their proved their boisterous qualities, but everyone knows that cheerleaders required more than just that. They also had to have knowledge of the sports they were cheering for. After all, they had to know when to say, "Come on, boys, get that down-touch."

The band starts playing the school song, the crowd rises, cheering, and out run the chosen few who make up the school's Pom-Pon squad to charm the spectators at the halftime periods of the football and basketball games. The stars of stage and screen who could not contain their theatrical desires for an entire three months joined Summer Theater and Music Workshop to produce three plays: Pinocchio, The Heiress, and How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying. In addition they took a trip to Stratford, Canada.

Pinocchio, of course, is the story of a son of a sequoia

who had a conspicuous nasal condition. The Heiress is about an ill-fated love affair, while How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying is about a man who rode a wicket to the top of the business world.

Would love by any other name be as sweet? Would Earnest? Could he, whose closest relative was the straw satchel he was found in as an infant, grow to find love and happiness from something other than a female scarecrow? These and other mind-boggling questions were tackled in Oscar Wilde's a turn of the century play examining the surface attitudes held by people at that time. As actor Tom Brisch said, "It will never be a dead play. It was funny, yet able to teach the stupidity of false values."

The Importance of Being Earnest,

Jeff Felter explains exactly where he'd like to send Mister Roberts.

Mister Roberts is a play about an ecology non-advocate and nature hater and the world's champion marble lover

and work avoider. Two men, Mister Roberts and Ensign Pulver, were roommates aboard the U.S.S. Bucket, a cargo ship, during World War II. Pulver, the marble lover, dreamed of placing some of his prized spheres in the commander's overhead light to prove his masculinity. Meanwhile, Mister Roberts was plaguing his commander, a starch-hater and all-around not-nice guy, with his vain attempts to attain a transfer to a battle zone. His bad behavior included repeatedly throwing the commander's palm tree overboard.

Mister Roberts eventually gained his transfer and was killed in action. An inspired Pulver then put aside his marble-mania, and in memory of Roberts became a nature persecuter and commander irritater by throwing another unsuspecting palm tree overboard.

The crew of the Bucket peruses slightly less than classic literature.

Did you see Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead? Did it seem that the whole play was based on the premise that an audience exists solely to be confused? Did you notice that only questions were tolerated in the dialog between Rosencrantz and Guildenstern?

Actually, you were overly blessed if you attended this show, because you were the bewildered watcher of two plays. One was the play itself, and the other was a play within the play. If the play without had been without the play within, it would certainly have been without an integral part. Thoughts as confusing as this were the premise that the play was built on. The confusion was both intentional and provocative.

The abduction occurs in an attempt to get a first hand view of the map, but it fails and no one gets the gold. Like an iceberg, much of Theatre Board remained hidden. Backstage, behind those tremendous actors and actresses stood a multitude of people who powdered, nailed,

designed, directed and misdirected.

This year Theatre Board achieved great success. All of their cast parties were well attended and enjoyed, and their plays weren't bad either. During the year they put on nine plays, all of which were dramatic successes.

Throughout the year student directors took it upon themselves to coordinate the mass confusion of broken zippers and missing props and to warn the cast of any oncoming major storm of rage from the faculty director.

Corral show people were thrilled that despite the show's title, few people were bored enough to wink off the two hours of showtime, and no one felt ripped off of the fee.

Rip Winks Off 25

was the story of a man who fell asleep at a crap game and slept through 25 years as life went on around him. He missed the great times from '45 to '73, when everything from the first television to Super Freak '73 came into existence.

Corral Board, which sponsored the show, could never have managed without the many workers who ran around backstage.

Few people realize that there is a deep dark hidden talent in many teachers. The spring play, written by LT teacher Mr. Mike Drake, gave testimony to what this talent can produce. Three teachers cease grading papers, refuse cafeteria duty, stop taking attendance, resign the role of Mr. Chips, and leave to become millionaires by dedicating themselves to the fine art of producing half-time shows. Half-time, the institution of pom-pon girls with pretty legs and crooked-line marching bands. They produced half-times never to be forgotten: the naming of the unknown soldier in "A Salute to War Veterans," and little Mary Lou in "A Salute to Mayonaise."

Steve Stang listens patiently as delinquent Corral members make excuses for not having their passes.

With apathy running rampant across LT, even the legendary Corral Board was bored. Although they tried to earn money by the Parent Trap Dance, movie nights, and big name groups, they barely succeeded in staying out of debt. Although their money-making ideas were good, all were copies from days of old and did not excite most Corral members. Corral was forced to close on Saturday nights this year because of high costs. The board brought Badfinger to LT during the summer and Looking Glass during the school year.

Since all the janitors were involved in pushing brooms and getting rid of the garbage that is created during the day, Key Club felt it their public duty to continue the fight against dirty windows as one of their service projects. The club sponsored Pancake and Peanut Days, marched for the March of Dimes, and raised funds for the American Cancer Society and United Hemophilia. The members were thrilled to see the girls come running to join the auxiliary Key Club. Undoubtedly, this made distributing posters in the empty halls a little more interesting. None of the members want to remember the fun times trying to fit the Toys For Tots bins into the school, failing, and then leaving them in the rain to create psychedelic crepe paper.

Success was this year's key work in the Interact Club vocabulary. Although minor problems cropped up in leadership during the year, many of the club's activities were successes and the club ended up with an

at the end of the year.

Much of Interact's power was used to further the clubs non-profit status as a charitable organization. The club's members had a variety of talents and made use of all of them by working at the Helping Hand School, selling fruitcakes, ushering at school concerts, and assisting Girls Club in running the paperback bookstore.

If you saw a group of grade school kids running through the halls of LT and you suffered multiple bruises in the jostling, you can blame Students for People, who brought them out for a day of excitement. If you saw those same little darlings cheering and clapping at the Pet Parade, once again Students for People was involved. Saturday mornings, with Mrs. Harris in charge, some Students for People went to Chicago to tutor at Martin Luther King Library. Some worked as volunteer aides for the handicapped children at Illinois State Children's Hospital school, helping them with their reading and playing games. Through the monthly meetings, Maggie Gibbs, Debbie Arndt, and Kathy Kopacz planned the services that the 15 to 20 members performed. The food drives at Thanksgiving and Christmas were sponsored by Students for People, and the food was given to the YMCA for distribution.

Conservation Club, billed as the hardest working club in the school, proved that working hard was profitable as they became one of the richest clubs in the school. Money was made by

Aside from making money, the club's main purpose was to educate the community and themselves in the area of ecological problems by attending conferences, building a float, and sending out a newsletter.

WLTL is associated with WIND, Westinghouse Broadcasting. This year disc jockeys changed from bubble-gum music to a rock style. The station adopted the slogan "Straight Ahead Radio" and wore it on shirts to advertise the station.

Members of Girls Club encouraged females to ask their guys to join them as they "Porked It" at the annual box supper. For those who couldn't believe they ate the whole thing and still survived, there was the opportunity to get romantic on the fall hayride. Not many tried it and liked it, though, and the proverbial needle remained unfound and lonely. Girls Club helped support orphans with the profit from the Bike Rally. The year's big event was, of course, the King of Hearts dance. As always, the dance was greeted with great enthusiasm by gallivanting girls who wanted to ask out their one and only love. If he refused, they proceeded to ask out another one and only.

Who remembers the superstar folk music heroes of the past, like the Christy Minstrels, The New Christy Minstrels, The Kingston Trio, The Kingston Quartet, Peter Paul and Mary, and Peter Paul and Mounds?

These are the names automatically associated with Folk Music Club, but the members' enthusiasm was not limited to the traditional answers blowin' in the wind up on Choctow Ridge which they could find if they only had a hammer. Each member pursued his own preferences in music. These endeavors ranged from turned-on Bach to ultra-modern. Members exhibited their musical talents in the annual folk music festival. They also went to see Bob Dylan in concert.

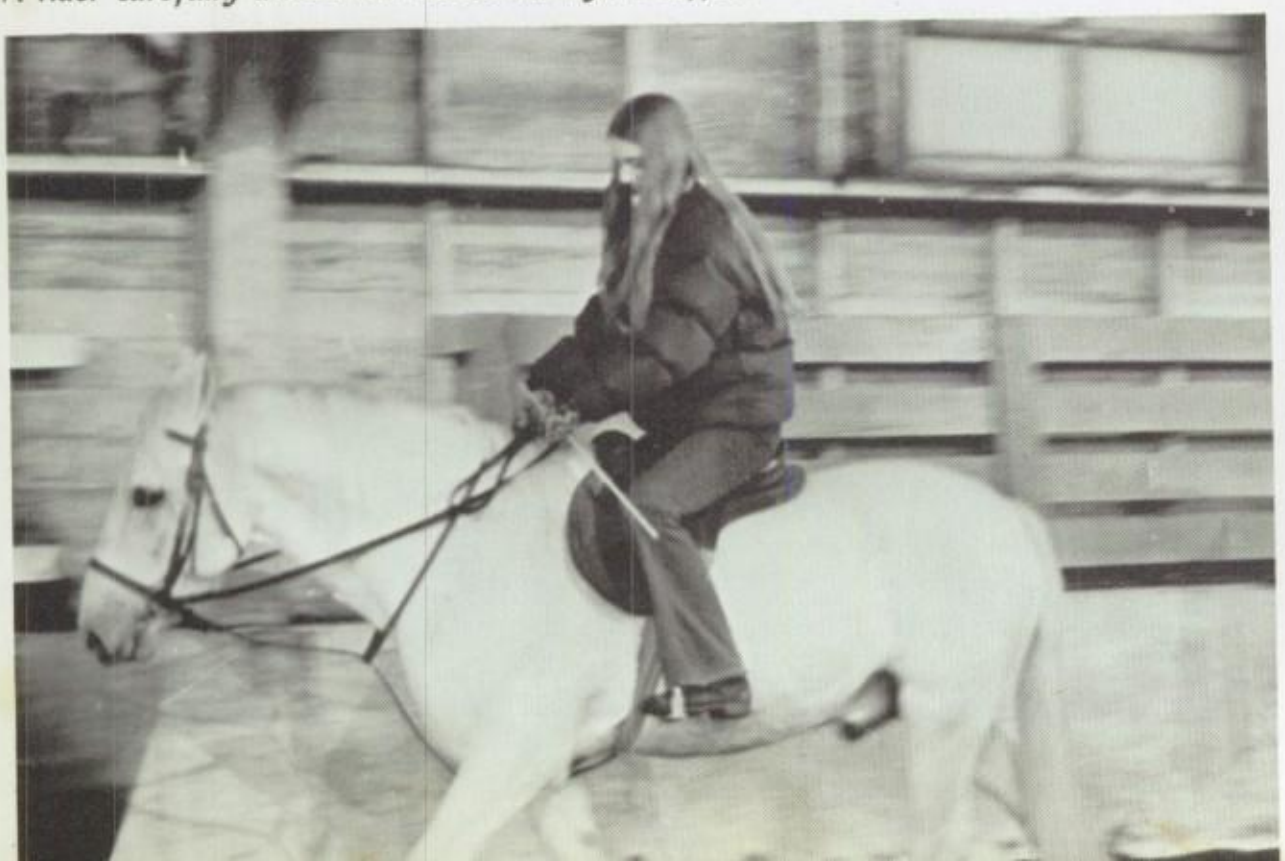
Girls contemplate riding form while walking their horses.

A rider carefully directs her horse through a difficult routine.



Saddle Bags and Bums, led by trail boss Jan Caliendo, had a rip-snortin' time stampeding weekly to the ol' corral to practice dressage, the art of tickling the horse to make it skeedaddle. While the year was moseyin' along the fifty caballeros took lessons from old cow hands on riding and jumping. The cowgals also ambled out to rodeos, horse shows, and livestock exhibitions in their moments that weren't busied with carin' for young 'uns.

During the long dog days of last summer, Saddle and Spur Club members again made their cattle drive west to visit a dude ranch in the Colorado ridges. There they watched the hands slop the hogs and saddle the hosses. They had such a hulla-ballootin' time they plan to bunk there again next summer.

Have you envied the people in your English class who could rattle off their oral reports with the greatest of ease while you stuttered and stammered and sweated a lot?

Did you ever wonder where they got those terrific speech skills and all that confidence? It could be that the speech team sponsors coached them a little bit. The speech team did well in its six tournaments, and LT students placed first in the American Oratorical Contest and the Voice of America contest.

Perhaps you have also noticed those certain students who always have their research papers done on time, with nineteen books in their bibliographies and 117 notecards each. Again this year, the debate coaches emphasized individual research and case analysis for members of the debate team. Not only did the debaters gain respect and prestige for their efforts, but they also learned those skills necessary to be able to convince their teachers to change due dates and postpone tests.

Students who were highly psyched with one particular subject often were attracted to one of the special interests clubs. Members' heroes ranged from Russian Club's Honey Spassky to Chess Club's Baby Face Bobby Fischer.

More intellectually inclined students spent precious free time pursuing the extra mental tasks they didn't have time for in class. Computerized students in Math and Astro-Science Clubs kept their

No, Virginia, there is an Ibid and you would be proud to take it out in public. Ibid contains the finest literary masterpieces the students of LT can produce and are brave enough to publish. are away from school

Your hours are given primarily to school, homework, eating and sleeping. But the times when you drive alone, go to parties, or relax for a silent moment seem more important than the hours of school. These are the times when you learn the most, when you study personalities instead of ancient numbering systems, when you are told how to be happy rather than how to structure a sentence. These are the times that teach you to learn.

Staggering out of registration with the usual looks of awe and dismay, the freshmen paid for elevator keys sold by "Honest John" Sophomore and acquired directions to the student lounge for only pennies. Looks of shock and delight appeared in January as the freshmen took six weeks of Health.

Although many of the freshmen class were heard to mutter on that first day such despairing thoughts as 'I need help'

and "So many books!" they managed to make it through the year as a friendly class of 1,388.

Freshmen cheerleaders extract enthusiasm at the pep assembly.

Extremely experienced, masterfully mature sophs became rulers supreme at South and required admiration and respect from awed frosh.

Freshmen watched enviously from their gym classes as the sophs played on the range, and competed to see who would be behind the wheel first. Most sophs were quickly humbled as screams erupted from their irate instructors.

Sophs were further humbled by the revelation that they didn't really know how to dos-a-dos and viewed with disappointment their grand promenade partners.

Junior year. In twenty years it may not be the year most remembered, but while time goes on, it is part of the transition from childhood to acceptance of adult roles.

With the change to North Campus, students assume more responsibility. After summer jobs and time away from home, many juniors look at themselves and others more realistically. Whether happy or disillusioned with what they have realized, they come to North more mature and self-reliant.

Junior year. It is one more

"Oh, Boof!" codgeled Otto, toot, toot. "Only inside out" intoned the captain of the Pinafore. "What's a pinafore?" tuddled a staffist. "For a stick-a-up" he outoned condescendingly. "Is the deadline done?" asked a stranger to the Tab office. "Are you kidding?" "No, It's my shirt," oy veyed Moly Hackeral. "Can I see the cover?" "Wrong again," chortled Pammy Prevert. While looking for her layouts, Delene incredulated, "We're short!" "And no ruler, either . . ." hollered Dawn. "They're all fun kids," Mrs. B said wistfully, "I just wish they'd let me go home once in a while." "Where's that son of a David?" wheezed Miz Liz. "Wyckoff's!" everyone enthusiastically bumbled, being Keyed up and all. "Wyckoff? Because it's better than sneezing, and much more polite," mumbled Tom, walking in to walk out. "Bullschmitt!" cried the staff. "Fie on thy head," sang the cherub. "You're a wolf," she said, for the thousand millionth time. "Only when it's Dawn." "An absent staffer gathers no mushrooms," she said Marily. "But you don't want to get caught off campus, do you?" "It was so funny!" "Hey, who the heck is he, eating all my pizza?" "Like, hey man, wow, dynamite." "Who's got a car, Sean? Sean, do you know who has a car, huh?"

You are leaving LT for as long as you possibly can; and when you get out in the world, you are going to become an unstoppable success. You are never going to let anyone get you down. You are going to stomp on your enemies and after they are thoroughly beaten you will condescend and help them survive. And after you have made your first million, you will write your autobiography about how you searched for the all-encompassing answer to which you had not quite articulated the question. You are going to wake up each morning feeling as if you have the whole world on the run and you are the smartest guy in the world.

And that's the way it should be.

Vicki - I am going to write you a long letter this summer. I'll see you this year. Thanks for all the food that you've given me. Have a fun summer!
It's been fun eating lunch with you and next year.
- Chris Baumgartner.

Vicki - I haven't had you in any of my classes this year and I hope next year you will be. Well all have fun this summer though, only 7 more days till no school. Well nothing more to say 'cept good-luck, muchos suerte, see ya, Love (485-2447) Raina.

I don't believe it.

Vicki, Que pases un buen verano
y no estudies

Cuidate mucho.
